1939 Motor Cruise: Wolf Creek Road

Portland will be brought an hour closer to Clatsop county beaches when the Wolf Creek highway is opened to the public June 30. Distances, present state of construction are shown on the above map.

This newspaper is co-operating with the Oregon State Motor association and the Oregonian in presenting a series of motorlogs designed to stimulate travel in Oregon and the Pacific northwest. This article was condensed from a motorlog appearing in The Oregonian June 18.

Completion of an important 16-mile section of the Wolf Creek highway by the end of this month will permit Portland and lower Willamette valley motorists to reach Clatsop county beaches in approximately two hours, according to Oregon State Motor association. The Oregonian motorloggers who made a test run over the new route recently.

The driving time contrasts sharply with the three-hour trip required over the twisting Lower Columbia River highway by Astoria. It was pointed out. Mileage over the new road will be 80 miles from Portland to Seaside. By the old route the speedometer on the motorlog car recorded 125 miles.

The cut-off, passing through burned-over timber land, is 26 miles shorter, saving about two gallons of gasoline and the discomfort of a crooked highway. When the road is officially opened by a caravan of federal, state, county and city officials and other interested motorists on June 30, the route from Portland will be out Canyon road, through Forest Grove, Timber and Elsie to the Oregon Coast highway at Necanicum junction. It will be opened from Portland to Elsie.

Highway and WPA officials, con-operating on the construction of the road say completion of the section from Portland to the new cut-off is indefinite. The Wilson river highway, leading to Tillamook, may be opened to travel late in 1940, it is estimated.

The Wolf Creek caravan, scheduled for June 30, will start from Portland, leaving about 10:30 a. m., according to Aaron Frank, general chairman of the committee in charge. A dedication ceremony has been scheduled at Sunset Camp, and a banquet at Seaside that evening. The return trip will be made by the Wilson River highway, with a luncheon arranged at McNamara's construction camp. A committee has prepared tickets entitling participants to all events.
