IT is now just a little more than two years since a minor and probably provoked clash at the Marco Polo bridge near Peiping sent Japan and China down into the grim whirlpool of war.

Two years—and no end in sight. The quick master-stroke that was to have beaten China to her knees at small cost has miscarried. And a million Japanese soldiers stagger on into the vast interior of China, victorious but frustrated, captors of a rich prize which slips through their fingers as they grasp it. The Chinese dead lie rotting in the ditches, and the steady stream of little white boxes containing the ashes of the Japanese dead trickles back to Nippon endlessly.

There are tales of vast slaughters, cities wiped out, hundreds and thousands mowed down, but the mind can not grasp them. That is a curious thing about the human mind. It is only so big. A man on a window-ledge threatening to jump off, or even a cat marooned on a floating log, will stir super-human efforts to save the victim. But the mass death of thousands is so overwhelming that the mind simply refuses to cope with it at all and remains almost indifferent.

That is why a single slight incident, trivial perhaps in itself, can reveal the horror of a war when the great panorama fails to impress at all. Such an incident is a little one just told by a correspondent in Japan.

A Japanese surgeon, rushed to the Chinese front in the early days of July, 1937, has been through the whole campaign. He has never seen a boy born shortly after he left. So his mind, amid the grimness of a military surgery, dwells on the little daughter he left behind him.

Amid the grinding repetition of horror on horror that is war, this surgeon writes home to his wife. And with his letter he sends a special page for the little daughter he loves so much. The thing that buoys him up is the thought of the daughter's laughing eyes and endearing hands that will greet him when he returns home.

So in each letter from "somewhere near Hankow" comes the special page written to his daughter. But she does not see them. She died last year. And the mother, knowing the strain under which her husband is working at the front, has not had the courage to tell him his daughter is dead. "When I see his letters to our daughter, I think my heart must break," she said.

Break, stout little Japanese woman-heart! You are only one of many millions, Chinese and Japanese. For that, too, is war. The toll of war is taken not only among the dead and wounded. It is also counted in broken hearts which never quite heal.

A third year of the war in China opens. No end is in sight. And there will be no end until there are enough broken hearts to cry in a commanding voice, "For what?" —By W. T.

crowded Chinese cities. Nature is relatively merciful.

A TOKYO dispatch claims 53 Russ planes shot down (with only one Jap plane lost) and the capture of 50 tanks and an undisclosed number of armored cars, field artillery and heavy machine guns in fighting along the Khalka river.

The tale sounds like Japanese propaganda, designed to bolster morale at home. But it MIGHT be true.

No one outside Russia knows what Stalin's frequent and bloody purges have done to the morale of the Red army. History tells us that internal intrigue SELDOM builds victorious armies.

WHY Japan, already busy in China, seems willing to take on the Russians in Outer Mongolia is a mystery. The most plausible explanation is that she HAS TO FIND OUT whether or not Russia CAN FIGHT.

JOHN SCHUM HEADS V. F. W. OF OREGON

PENDLETON, July 13.—(AP)—Oregon Veterans of Foreign Wars closed their annual convention yesterday by electing and installing John Schum, Portland, commander and awarding the 1940 convention to Corvallis.

Schum is a detective lieutenant in the Portland police department.

I. D. Canfield, Medford, was elected senior vice-commander; C. J. Johnson, Pendleton, junior vice-commander; W. E. McGuffin, Portland, department quartermaster; Louis Starr, Portland, judge advocate; Dr. J. W. Ingram, Seaside, surgeon; Rev. James S. Reddick, St. Helens, chaplain.

OFFICERS ELECTED BY VFW AUXILIARY

PENDLETON, July 12.—(AP)—Betty Hamreus of Portland, who, since 1929 has held virtually every office in the State Veterans of Foreign Wars auxiliary, and who has been senior vice president the last year, Wednesday was elected president, at the state convention here.

Mrs. Hamreus is the wife of A. B. Hamreus, Portland boat builder, member of the V. F. W., who was in the transport service during the World war.

Other officers elected were: Arilla Atkinson, Eugene, senior vice president; Ethel Beck, Seaside, junior vice president; Frances Kilkoski, Portland, chaplain; Esther Long, Silverton, conductress, and Lelia Pothour, The Dalles, guard.

OUT OUR WAY

By Williams

RAMBLINGS

By PAUL JENKINS

DO'YE recall that 25-acre farm of Carl Curtis's on the Davis hill road out of Wilbur?" asked Fred Goff of me a couple of days ago. "Well, I just sold it to some California people. By the way, you ought to drive by and stop there—you'd see an interesting sight."

I was intrigued by his suggestion, so on my way back from a trip to Driver valley that afternoon, I stopped. The Curtises were in town, but Mrs. Anderson, wife of the new owner, was there.

"Oh yes, I can show you what Mr. Goff had in mind," she said, and led the way to the kitchen. (Yes, I said to myself, the things that interested Fred most would surely be found in any kitchen.) Pointing to a stew-pan hanging on the wall above the sink, Mrs. Anderson suggested that I try and guess what was behind it. I guessed there was a knot-hole, having been told that much by the enterprising Mr. Goff.

"That's right," she corroborated, "and it was discovered by a pair of swallows this summer. Finding the stew-pan, on the inside, entirely to their liking, they proceeded to build a nest in it. The Curtises, charmed, allowed the construction work to proceed, and now you may see the result." Taking down the pan, sue showed me the nest, and in it, five thrifty swallows.

"I'll certainly be relieved when they are old enough to leave home and make their own way in the world," mrs. Anderson further informed me. "They're awfully noisy. They cheep all the time, and their nest isn't very nice to have in the kitchen. They've about driven me mad, and I've only been here one day."

Mr. Anderson, Fred told me, is a glassblower in a Los Angeles plant. He bought the Curtis farm as a future home, when he retires from his trade. The Curtises—my information is from the same source—plan on returning to California, their former home.

Incidentally, Mr. Goff, who as you know, deals in real estate, told me that within the past two weeks he has had one hundred fifty inquiries concerning Douglas county farms and other property, most of these coming from homeseekers in California.

Well, let us hope all of them come here, and buy homes, and find contentment and a fair measure of prosperity here.

In fact, we'll help 'em hunt for it.

REPRIEVE GRANTED S. P. DEPOT, GERVAIS

SALEM, July 12.—(AP)—The 251 residents of the little town of Gervais, 15 miles north of here, were happy today after Public Utilities Commissioner Osmond R. Bean gave their 69-year-old Southern Pacific depot a reprieve until August 1.

The railroad decided to close the little once-busy station but Bean granted the station a new lease on life after residents of Gervais protested.

The station, built by the Oregon & California Railroad company in 1870 to tap the rich grain and livestock region, is a few days older than Salem's station.

It took the first train three hours and 10 minutes to make the 35-mile run from Gervais to Portland.
