MELROSE H. E. CLUB MEETS

MELROSE, July 17.—Mrs. C. E. Reese was a very charming hostess to the Melrose Home Economics club at her home Wednesday afternoon.

Following the business meeting Mrs. Norma Penn had charge of the program on the subject of photography.

Mrs. Penn gave a very interesting talk on picture-taking and demonstrated with snap shots on what to do and what not to do.

The next meeting will be held July 26th and will be an all-day session, with a potluck dinner at noon. Mrs. Nettie Woodruff will be hostess and Mrs. Charles Doerner will have charge of the program and has chosen "Progress in Medicine" for her subject.

At the close of the afternoon meeting dainty refreshments were served by Mrs. Reese, who was assisted by her mother, Mrs. T. H. Busenbark and Miss Walthea Richards, and at well arranged tables covers were placed for Mrs. J. W. Bays and Mrs. E. T. Reese, visitors, and members were Mrs. Mable Busenbark, Mrs. Katie Conn, Mrs. Fay Conn, Mrs. Lucille Conn, Mrs. Amy Kruse, Mrs. William Brunk, Mrs. Grace Penn, Mrs. Norma Penn, Mrs. Bernice Britton, Mrs. Nettie Woodruff, Mrs. Ethel Busenbark, Miss Walthea Richards, Miss May Taylor and the hostess, Mrs. C. E. Reese.

MRS. HARTSHORN IS HOSTESS TO CLUB

SUTHERLIN, July 17.—Mrs. Wilson Hartshorn delightfully entertained the Past Noble grands club at her home Wednesday afternoon July 12. The rooms were beautifully decorated with seasonal flowers and a centerpiece of mixed flowers was exceptionally well arranged.

The afternoon was spent in playing games and visiting. The feature of the day was a fashion show of hats for which Mrs. Ella Wagner won the prize. In a names contest Mrs. Barre's side won the prize and Mrs. Robert Hall won the door prize.

Covers were placed for the following members: Mrs. Harriet Stearns, Mrs. Margaret Medley, Mrs. Susie Burnett, Miss Pearl

Today's Pattern

Shirred Vestee Makes This Design Smartly Flattering

Fashions come and fashions go, but nothing can change the fact that when you want to look feminine and appealing, you'd better wear a bit of snowy white under your chin.

Therefore, in a season when fashion sets great store by prettiness, touches of white are very popular and a shirred vestee makes this lovely design. Pattern 8392, particularly complementary. Slim, shirred, small-waisted and broad-shouldered, the dress has another filly of feminine charm in the ribbon tied round your waist.

Make this of silk print, handkerchief linen, flat crepe or zephyr, with vestee of organza, chiffon or silk. You'll find it one of the most becoming afternoon styles you ever had on.

Pattern 8392 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 14 requires 3 1/2 yards of 29-inch material; 3 3/4 yard contrasting for vestee; 1 7/8 yards of ribbon.

The new SPRING AND SUMMER PATTERN BOOK, 32 pages of attractive designs for every size and every occasion is now ready. Photographs show dresses made from these patterns being worn; a feature you will enjoy. Let the charming designs in this new book help you in your sewing. One pattern and the new Spring and Summer Pattern Book—25 cents.

Send your order to the News-Review, Pattern Department, Roseburg, Oregon.

SERIAL STORY BORDER ADVENTURE

By OREN ARNOLD

in, pleadingly, watching her blue eyes.

"It's your business to get accurate information before acting," she declared. "Isn't it, now?"

One word had led to another. Talk, talk, talk, details, details. When Officers Kildare and Starr had dutifully reported their failure again to capture Luis Barro, worst of all border smugglers, an extremely busy department chief in Washington had sent his efficient secretary out for a firsthand report. (She had carried out more than one assignment like this.)

And the officers had dared her to demonstrate her efficiency!

They had dared her impulsively, as boys would, hence they were alarmed when she accepted. There had been a new prisoner in the city jail, named Salazar, in whose pockets had been some cocaine wrapped much like Luis Barro's man?

She had left Messrs. Starr and Kildare looking as dejected as normally happy young officers could possibly look. She would go see the prisoner Salazar herself. Any lead—any kind of lead whatsoever—might be the one tip which would result in capture of Luis Barro! "You must use brains, gentlemen, as well as brawn, in combating criminals! I—I will go see this Salazar myself, since you dare me to do something!"

She had talked much more than good judgment dictated, she realized now, but she had to go on. She hesitated just a moment outside the gray police station, then went boldly in.

Sure, you can see him! the police chief told her when she had presented her credentials. "Anything the federal boys want. You on the Border Patrol now, miss?"

"Just briefly, and unofficially," Betty Mary dimpled at him, and that was enough. "I don't want him to see me."

Salazar sat for 10 minutes with two detectives in an inner office. They questioned him in Spanish but learned nothing, while Betty Mary peeked at him unobserved. She noted every minute detail, mentally photographing him.

Next she asked the jailer to show her the man's personal effects—knife, gun, coins, handkerchief, packaged narcotics, all the things found in his clothing.

"What would be doing with a cartridge like this?" she asked, casually thumbing it. "This doesn't fit his gun. This cartridge is a .22 rim fire."

"Dunno," said the jailer. "Found one like it on another Mexican arrested last month. And some poor boys had one in their pockets. I didn't know, I guess."

"Interesting," murmured Betty Mary, and stared at the thing a long time. It was dirty, and grubby, but seemingly unimportant.

She conferred then with the police chief again, in private. He told her a great many things. The chief was a man of 60 with daughter of his own. He even showed her photos of his grandchildren, discussing them proudly. When she left he had agreed to a detailed plan. In the alley back of her hotel at 3 a. m. "Exactly, miss," he called on her for anything, miss. She thanked him and went away.

Meanwhile, Inspectors Starr and Kildare of the U. S. Immigration and Naturalization Service—young teamsters in the service who had chosen this most fascinating (but dangerous) work for their careers—were anything but comfortable. After Betty Mary left them they talked earnestly in a letter of mutual sympathy, then down the street, friends aside by nursing this most delicate high side as they had been since high school days.

Gloom enveloped them because Luis Barro had indeed brought a peculiar genius into his smuggling operations, was heightened now because a woman—a girl—had been sent out to discipline them. They had not taken seriously her promise to help catch Barro.

"She has come on back to her hotel, I reckon," Sheridan Starr said. "Probably whistle us up again tonight."

"Yeap!" Hope Kildare agreed. "What say we go back, drive down and pump this prisoner, Salazar?"

"Okay," they lingered at their office for an hour, first, however, studying Salazar's fingerprint record, and then questioning a new course of action which might trap Luis Barro. But they weren't satisfied with two older officers came in and conferred with them at length, so that it was late afternoon when they finally took a government car and drove to the city police headquarters.

"We want to see this Salazar you got on a dope charge," Starr requested.

The desk sergeant himself got keys from the jailer and led them back to a cell.

"That's him," the sergeant said, pointing. "But—uh, we was a little crowded, and had to put old granny in with him for a few hours. You want talk to him alone?"

"No, thanks, just want to be acquainted. Howdy, Salazar."

"Buenos dias, señores."

"Howdy, granny, what you in for? You hitting the dope, too?" Starr was looking closely at Salazar, but Kildare stared at the woman. She appeared quite old; a faded Mexican in a black skirt, and a black shawl that came up over her head to be pinned under her chin, then draped down over narrow stooped shoulders, a common type. Her face looked pale in the gloom of the cell.

"No, señor, only a little," she whined, and subbed a bit, bowing so that only her forehead was seen. Starr was ignoring her, intent on the man. But Hope Kildare's mouth dropped open.

Hope's keen ears had detected what his eyes had missed. Behind the man Salazar, the poor old woman, Hope for an instant, then slowly shook her head.

Daily Devotions

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

Poverty is generally recognized as a condition of distress. To be bereft of the things so essential to life's ongoing is to be unhappy, undernourished and sometimes it brings even bitterness of soul. But in the sermon on the Mount we have a striking paradox. It is blessed to be poor. This poverty is of the spirit. The spirit of man may become proud. It may think itself to be rich in its own prowess and achievements. As the spider has within its body the web which it spins and in which it takes the central position, so the spirit of man may think itself rich in the philosophy of life which it may devise and in the center of this philosophy it may abide, expecting to gather the wealth of living and the largest of the universe as they pass by. But Jesus said, Blessed is the man that knows his own spirit is poor. Then he will be faithful from that partnership with God which will bring him all the enrichments of the Holy Spirit. His spirit will be blessedly rich in the consciousness of its poverty. May we even be poor in spirit. Amen.
