MYRTLE CREEK, July 20.—Mrs. O. R. Hess and John Wilson are building summer cabins at Mameo lake near Florence. While hunting on Red mountain near Pole, the other day, Jess Rounds had rather a peculiar experience. Below him on the hillside he noticed two digger squirrels going through some strange antics. He sat in line with them and fired his gun. They fell over and on going to them he found he had also shot and killed a rattlesnake which had undoubtedly charmed the squirrels and was intending to have them for dinner. Squirrel hunting is not the only pastime on Red mountain. George Mares reports that two men from a rattlesnake farm at Grants Pass were at his ranch one day last week hunting more stock for their plant. They caught three and put them in a sack and departed amid great buzzing and rattling of the nervous occupants of the sack.

A party of Roseburg men returning from a trip south Saturday night, in attempting to negotiate the turn on the south approach to the Myrtle Creek bridge at a rapid rate of speed, had a head-on collision with the railing which slowed the car around until the rear end of the machine went into the pit which was under the approach to the old bridge.
