

FOE OF RADICALS GIVES TESTIMONY

Knowles, at Bridges Quiz, Says American Legion Sole Employer.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7. (AP)—Harper Knowles, American Legion anti-radical leader, joined at Harry Bridges' deposition hearing today that the Legion's investigation of subversive activities was based fraudulently by employer groups.

The witness said, however, a Legion committee of which he was chairman exchanged information with industrial and business groups. He also admitted he once acted in a paid position with the Associated Farmers of California while directing the Legion investigation.

Knowles, called by Bridges' defense as an adverse witness, was questioned in an effort to show the move to deport the west coast CIO leader was the result of an alleged conspiracy of employer groups.

Knowles said he became chairman of the Legion committee in 1935. He also admitted he once acted in a paid position with the Associated Farmers of California while directing the Legion investigation.

The witness said the Legion committee was supported by an annual allowance from the Legion of $225. He said the committee exchanged information with the United States chamber of commerce, the San Francisco chamber of commerce, the Industrial Association of San Francisco, private detective agencies and law enforcement officials in California, Oregon and Washington.

He said his committee gave information to the United States army and navy intelligence units and he was then asked if he had a "give-and-take" relationship with any other government agency.

"Yes," he replied, "the Immigration Service."

Bridges' defense contends immigration officials at Seattle and Portland were involved in the alleged deportation conspiracy.

SERIAL STORY BORDER ADVENTURE BY OREN ARNOLD

PAST OF CHARACTERS BETTY MARY JORDAN—Pretty young Border Patrol service secretary. SHERIDAN STARR—Handsome Border Patrol officer. HOPE KILDARE—Starr's fellow officer, also a bachelor. LUIS HARRIO—Mexican smuggler.

Yesterday, Harro suspicious Betty, tells her so and then she is carried off by two of Harro's lieutenants to another part of the house. She retains her hysteria because resistance is useless.

CHAPTER XX On the afternoon that Inspector Hope Kildare, of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, admitted that he was in love with Betty Mary Jordan, the first loneliness in all their meeting came between him and Sheridan Starr.

The Kildare and Starr families had lived in another part of Texas side by side. The parents had been close friends. Young Sheridan and young Hope had enjoyed their fights as small youngsters, but only in teamwork fighting some one else. They had romped and enjoyed life through grade school, high school, thence into college. Perfect athletes, they had achieved wide fame as football players. What one had attained the other had shared, always. And now there was conflict over pretty Betty Mary Jordan.

"Well, Hope, Sheridan said that evening when they would have gone to supper together as usual. 'If it's not a sin for you to love her, I guess it's not a sin for me either. I guess we can't either of us help it. You ready to go out now?'

Hope did not look at his friend. He was staring vacantly away. "No, I'm not hungry," he said finally.

Sheridan went without a word. He did not depart whistling, or posturing with other officers in the headquarters offices as he was wont to do. He just walked glumly out alone.

He didn't know how long he had walked, but when he came to himself at last it was dark. From force of habit he drifted to a favorite cafe and told the waitress there to bring him anything—just anything. She put down a good meal but he ate less than half of it. He got up and wandered out without thinking even to say his good night. The cashier saw him, but didn't disturb him; she knew he was an excellent, steady customer.

"Mr. Starr says his best friend, the waitress commented. "Got the blues, I guess," said the cashier. "Well, we all get em."

turning back home by the way of Marshfield. They reported this as being a very pretty drive.
