POET'S CORNER

Writer's note: Michel de Nostradamus was born in 1503 and died in 1566. His prophetic writings were first published in 1555. Many of his prophecies have been fulfilled.

The following poem about him was recently published in American Voices:

MICHEL DE NOSTRADAMUS

By ALDEN HARNESSE
In the mountains in remotest spaces,
Which drew him to the silent places
Of lofty regions dark with trees,
He gained the mental world which faces
The unknown world of mysteries.

Transcendent love and intuition,
Revealing that his earthly mission
Was work that God would give him here,
Endowed him with divine cognition,
And deepened him into a seer.

Aggression, greed and made decisions;
A war as deadly as collisions
Of flying planets, he foretold.
This conflict he beheld in visions,
A stricken world may soon be hold.

Daily Devotions

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

St. Paul tells us in Heb. 12:1 that we are constantly surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses. The communion of saints has been the source of great comfort and encouragement to many people. It is more than a formal recital statement, it is a great reality, and it often is the motivation for right living. There is Christian basis for our faith that our dear departed friends are not far away. Our inability to see them does not prove they are not near, for many unseen things are most certain realities. Those who are faithful to God will find great comfort in fellowship with the Holy Spirit and with the thought of accompanying Saints. The church being a fellowship of Christians here and there. It would be strengthening to make a list of our heroic and beloved dead, as did the author of the Hebrews, and then realize they are near to stimulate and strengthen us in the hour of our discouragement. We thank Thee, Our Father that we are surrounded with a great cloud of witnesses. May we join with them in our efforts so that we too may live triumphantly day by day for Jesus sake. Amen.
