

Myrtle Point To Be R. H. S. Foe Tonight

Cos Basketball Haven't Won This Season but Playing Has Been of High Order.

The conference-leading Roseburg high school quintet will meet Myrtle Point, the league's cellar occupants, in the final district No. 8 engagement of the season tonight at senior high. The game will start promptly at 8:15 o'clock and will be preceded by an interclass volleyball contest starting at 7:30.

The Robert Indian encounter was to have been the final home game of the season but a change in the schedule will bring University high of Eugene, leaders of district No. 7, back to the senior high school court tomorrow evening in another non-conference battle.

Lack of an available court on which the Indians and the Golden Tide could tangle, necessitated the change. This will give the Orange and Black an opportunity to avenge a humiliating 29-15 setback administered by the visitors two weeks ago. At that time Coach Jim Watts' eagles were playing their third game in five days and were no match for the speedy campus quintet, which was definitely "on."

Hard Luck Record

Coach Pat Rickard's Indians have not won a conference or a Cos county league game since the season opened, yet in a majority of these affairs, they have been defeated by less than five points, which indicates a strong defensive team. Given a bit of luck, this same outfit could easily be in there within a game or two of the league leaders.

At Myrtle Point, the Wattsmen were forced to play their best to return home with anything but a convincing 26-10 win over their hosts.

The Indians will probably start Ray Puckett and Jim Flury at forwards, Earl Ward at center; Virgil Sanders and Lowell Baker of guards, Bill Goodlow, Ed Hughes, Lowell Atterbury, Bill Woodruff and several others will likely see action.

SERIAL STORY THE CAPTAIN'S DAUGHTER

BY HELEN WORDEN

show room. Another minute and she was padding back and forth in front of Lynda Martin, the flame red, exciting, gorgeous, wrapping the scarlet length about her slim body.

The eyes of the two girls met and clashed. There was curiosity in Lynda's dark ones. It was the first time she had seen the debutante whose picture had been on so many society and roborogance pages.

Just 17, Lynda was the only child of James Martin, the newly rich grocery chain store head. Her mother was dead. She lived a life of hectic gaiety. This much Lynda knew. She recalled that she was supposed to be engaged to Dan Donovan, whose father was also rich.

"Lynda's pretty," Marie lauded. "But what a disconcerted face! With all that money and yet she doesn't look as if she had a good time."

Lynda thought, "She may be beautiful, but what a life, always showing off clothes you never get a chance to wear."

Varnet took credit for discovering Marie's beauty, but it was really John Powers, head of the agency which supplied Varnet with models, who had picked her. A few pointers on how to walk and how to show off clothes and Marie was wearing a $22.50 Seventh Avenue special so that it looked like a $225 Paris original.

Her hair was blue black and her eyes liquid velvet. She had a lovely skin, very white and red.

Gracefully she stretched before Lynda Martin, proudest slowly to show the lines of the dress, her scarleted figure mirrored back in the amber glass side walls of the salon.

Varnet strolled quickly across the white plush covered floor. "I'm so sorry our subvention have left for the day," he apologized.

Lynda raised a perturbed face. "I didn't know till this afternoon that I was going to the particular dinner I want this dress for. But I can't wear red because that shade will not yellow hair."

"Oh, excuse me," Varnet drew up a chair beside her. "This shade is only for our salon. I see you in a mysterious, provocative, silvery black. Then the dress will justify its name. Adventure! There's just enough of the blue and red in you. Your mouth, your breasts."

Lynda's blue eyes widened. "Why then, just what has Dan done to me and never finding, admiring? He's come with me to this party."

At length Lynda said, "I'll take the dress, but I must have it by the end of the week."

She glanced at her watch. "You don't know the time? You have to be here at 8:30. You have to be here at 8:30. You have to be here at 8:30."

Roosevelt, Wilson Vary on Bombings

President's Scoring of Present Italian War, are Unlike Predecessor's Censure.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—(AP)—President Roosevelt's condemnation of aerial bombing of civilian populations, state department documents showed today, contrasts sharply with President Wilson's attitude during the world war.

Publication of the papers of Robert Lansing, secretary of state under Wilson, disclosed the latter refused to make formal protest against bombings of Antwerp and London by German dirigibles.

The earliest he would go was to drop a hint to the American ambassador in Berlin to tell a German official personally of the bad impression such bombings produced on public opinion.

William Jennings Bryan, who preceded Lansing as secretary of state, brought up the matter with Wilson in a letter saying: "Should there be any protest—and if so, should it be based upon danger to Americans, or upon the broader ground that it is an improper method of warfare?"

"My present judgment is that we do not know in sufficient detail the actual facts and that we ought to be very slow to make formal protests, chiefly because we shall no doubt be called upon by every one of the belligerents before the fighting is over to do something of this kind and would be in danger of becoming chronic critics of what was going forward."

"I think the time for clearing to all these matters will come when the war is over and the national rather in sober counsel again."

Wilson Modifies Stand

Wilson did not send a message to Ambassador James Gerard in Berlin, saying: "I venture with not a little hesitancy to make this suggestion at your conference that you, as a member of the government, and say that nothing is making an unfavorable, not to say, fatal, an impression in this country as the dropping of bombs from airships upon cities elsewhere than upon military objectives, with no result except terror and the destruction of innocent lives."

The following year the British ambassador, Sir Cecil Spring Rice, complained to Lansing of the "difference" at the American government to the zeppelin bombings of London.

Wilson commented to Lansing in a note dated only "OK W." "Of course we understand that the British government cannot depend on one people or one embassy against these air raids, but we do understand, as Sir Cecil does not when he is under great excitement, that it is none of our business to protest against them, much less of 'wearing' an attitude that our opinion of them may be."

Roosevelt Speaks Out

President Roosevelt, on the other hand, sent a message last September at the outbreak of the war to Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Poland appealing to each to affirm its determination to refrain from aerial bombing of civilian populations. He said that "the ruthless bombing from the air of civilians" shocked the heart of every civilized man and woman and has repeatedly shocked the conscience of mankind.

The Lansing papers disclosed also that Wilson wanted both the German and Austrian ambassadors to quit Washington a year and a half before the United States entered the world war, following disclosure that they had employed an American to carry secret messages to Berlin. The messages outlined activities of the two diplomats to cripple American plants manufacturing munitions for the allies.
