Buttons and bows are quick to stitch and give you a winsome, slim line. Even the neckline is easily scalloped. The illustrated Sewing instructor will show you how simple to make this frock is. Why not use a smart linen or shantung... or choose a flower-printed cotton. For extra charm, consider adding lovely leaf appliques in brilliant hues, as shown in the small sketch.

Reds Endeavor to Make Quick "Kill"

Overthrow of Finland Before She Can Get Substantial Help Aim of Invaders.

By DE WITT MACKENZIE
The fierceness of the bolshevik drives against the Finns represents a supreme effort on the part of the reds to make a quick "kill" before several prospective brands of trouble are dumped across their bloody route.

The Muscovite behemoth is trying to out-run time. But despite the fact that the defenders are bent under the mountainous weight being flung against them it's anybody's war yet.

The Finns still may turn the trick, if their dog-tired but determined little army can withstand for maybe a month the terrific pressure which is being exerted against it, both from the north and from the south.

1. Dispatch of an allied expeditionary force to support the defenders.
2. The coming of spring when Mother Nature again will take a hand to protect her folk in the land of lakes by turning the countryside into a near-morass, across which armies cannot fight.

Other aid already is getting through to the Finns, including volunteers of many nationalities. A striking indication that things are beginning to swing toward the Finns is the announcement in London that Major Kermit Roosevelt, son of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, would apply for permission to resign his commission in the British army to take command of the international volunteers in Finland.

The reds have two great drives in progress. They are striking southward from the Arctic coast and already have smashed their way some seventy-five miles into the country. And on the fiercely contested Karelian Isthmus the battered Mannerheim line and trying to turn the Finnish right wing by capturing the devastated city of Viipuri, the strategic railway junction which the Finns continue to defend desperately.

A Moscow communique this morning said the red army was within four miles of Viipuri, after capturing six more towns.
War Entry inevitable
Allied intervention with a trained and fully equipped expeditionary force would, of course, mean a declaration of war against the reds. It would also mean the forcing of Russia into military alliance with Germany. However, the feeling has been steadily growing in the allied countries that they will have to fight Russia sooner or later and that it would be better to strike as soon as possible.

The idea would be not only to give the Finns relief but to open up a new front in the Baltic which could be used not only against Russia but against Hitler. This would give the allies the chance which they would like to strike at Germany's northern flank. And it is at all unlikely that in the near future another battle front may be breached in the Balkans and near east so that the allies can get at Hitler and Stalin from the south.

The only way the allies can get troops into Finland now without violating the neutrality of Norway and Sweden is to ship them north to Finland's Arctic port of Petsamo, or Russian neighboring Murmansk, and land them there after blasting the reds out of occupation with naval guns.

That would be a cumbersome operation, however. What Britain and France really want is to get Norway and Sweden into the war, and then the problem of moving troops would be solved.

The Danmore Hotel Meets the Motor Courts in Price and Service
