Ice Carnival Jams City of Fairbanks

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, March 8.—(AP)—Miner and trapper, Canadian and American, white and native, thronged Fairbanks today for the northland's biggest party—the annual four-day ice carnival.

Visitors who came to this "golden heart of Alaska" by airplane, dogteam and railway, cut loose in snow-clad Fairbanks for 86 hours of fun and frolic. It was a case of "a hot time in the old town" at temperatures ranging downward to the zero mark.

Far parks of trappers and dog team mushers, bright colors of modern sportswear and sober business clothes mingled in the streets as Fairbanks became the territory's winter capital.

There were Canadians from Dawson, famed Yukon territory mining center, who came by plane; 200 visitors from Anchorage and way points on the Alaska railroad who came by train and other settlements along the vast swamps of the Yukon river.

Three features headline the celebration—the ice-carnival, dog races and all-Alaska beauty contest.

Seven girls from Alaska communities compete tomorrow night for the title of "Miss Alaska." Three Canadian beauty queens from the Yukon will share the spotlight with their American cousins.

Dog teams are ready from scattered Alaska points to start the two-day round trip race over the 165-mile course between Fairbanks and Livenwood. It is the northland's most grueling sporting test of man and dog.

"The wool market appears to be leveling off and a fair weight of spot wool has moved to the manufacturers and spinners. These sales have included foreign wools purchased early in the season which show a profit even though sold below replacement.

"Domestic wools have moved in small weights at irregular prices. Topmakers have made a few purchases of good class 3 fine topmaking wools at 78 to 80 cents, clean basis, and a fraction lower. Some of the best class 3 fine wools are held firm here at 88 to 90 cents, clean basis.

"The sale of old wools in Illinois near Harnett at 35 cents, landed cost. Buying of the new three-eighths and quarter-blood fleeces is reported from Michigan at 35 cents, delivered. "There is a better feeling in the New York piecegoods market due to the opening of fall lines, but it is too early to report results."
