Every state, county and city official or board that handles public money should publish at regular intervals an accounting of it, showing where and how each dollar is spent. This is a fundamental principle of democratic government.

FROM time to time someone offers a candidate for the position of the "world's meanest man." That dubious honor cannot be conferred upon the fellow we have in mind because his act was not one of meanness—but rather, it was plain thoughtlessness. It is reported that some ardent bird hunters have been engaged lately in training young dogs, fine hunting animals of which the owners are very proud, in the art of bird-dogging. The idea of exercising the dogs is fine enough but it happens to be nesting time for the pheasants about now. When the practicing hunters run their dogs (and themselves) over a field in which pheasants are attempting to produce a brood of young, the results are not very happy ones for the bird population.

Insurance companies keep a very close tab on death rates and the causes of death—it is a part of their business for the reason that any change in the average life span makes a great deal of difference in their statistics and in their business.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance company has discovered the encouraging news that pneumonia mortality has made a sharp drop this year. For the first quarter of 1940 the pneumonia death rate dropped 27 per cent as compared with the corresponding period in 1939. Just a year ago a drop of 15 per cent was reported as "the most striking in the entire field of public health in 1939." The 27 per cent drop of this year should rate even stronger comment. Pneumonia is about the most wicked killer of all of the diseases.

The fellow who got himself a vast amount of free publicity by offering to pay a million dollars to the kidnaper of Chancellor Hitler has had his bluff at least partially called. Some adventurer says he will do the job but that the money must be put up in escrow. The whole affair is too silly to merit much attention.

There is just this to remember with reference to anything of this kind: We are not at war with Germany. We desire, if humanly possible, to keep at peace not only with Germany but with all other nations. We certainly cannot believe that this fool publicity stunt will encourage our peaceful relations.

he got away whole.

(DON'T forget that in the long run Rome defeated Hannibal and destroyed Carthage, and Fabius, the successful retreater, had quite a hand in the ultimate outcome.)

THE big thing for US to avoid is getting stampeded into the war in the emotional belief that the allies are hard pressed now and will be defeated and destroyed unless we come to their aid.

If the British and the French are hard pressed as a result of the minor fighting in which they have so far engaged, their cause is HOPELESS, and even we can't help them.

WHAT has really happened in Norway is still a mystery, almost totally shrouded in censorship, but in his apologetic talk to parliament Chamberlain gives at least a hint of the larger picture.

British naval losses, he says, have been relatively insignificant. The losses of the German navy, however, he contends, "have been so substantial as to alter the whole balance of naval power, and have permitted an important redistribution of the MAIN ALLIED FLEETS."

IN judging this statement, WATCH ITALY.

Italy won't come into the war unless she feels reasonably certain of defeating the allied fleets and gaining control of the Mediterranean. If the spectacular German dash into Norway had succeeded in drawing the main allied fleets into the dangerous entrance to the Baltic and there seriously crippling it by combined air, submarine, mine and warship attack, the way would have been cleared for Italy to strike in the Mediterranean.

Italy HASN'T STRUCK. It is therefore a fair conclusion that Muasolini considers the allied fleets as still too tough to tackle.

THIS war isn't over yet. It may be that it has HARDLY STARTED YET. It is far too early to jump to the conclusion that the British-French allies are in a bad way and about to pass out.

R.H.S. Grads' High Marks at U. of O. Exams Noted

Members of the graduating class of Roseburg high school made higher scores on the University of Oregon entrance examination than were made by the present U. of O. freshmen who took the test at the time they entered the university, it was announced today. The local seniors recently took the examination, which was identical in form with the one given freshmen at the university last year.

Carolyn Allen had the highest grade for the Roseburg seniors, 362, as compared with 355, the highest score at the university. The lowest score by local students was 99 and at the U. of O. the low score was 96. The Roseburg students made an average of 267, one point above the university average of 266. One hundred and twenty-one seniors and one graduate took the entrance examination. The five high scores were made by Carolyn Allen, Faith Young, Betty Mae Whipple, Betty Jean Byrd and Bob Norton. Twenty-one of the students received percentages above 300, which, it is reported, is an excellent rating.

The purpose of the examination was to give the seniors experience and training regarding the form of a college entrance examination. Delmar Ramsdell was the instructor in charge.

Although falling outside the money winning ranks, the Roseburg team, with a score of 2880, was in 8th place among the scores of teams participating. Top place was won by a Los Angeles team with a score of 2982.

DAILY DEVOTIONS
DR. CHAS. A. EDWARDS

There are two attitudes which we as Christians, may assume toward God and His work. The one is that of a servant. The small child in the home, like the servant, does the work assigned him in the spirit of a servant, because the parent has planned it and requires that it shall be done. There is no particular interest or enthusiasm. The whole thing is a task set by another. The second attitude is the attitude of a son who has grown to manhood. He is an heir with all the privileges which sonship brings. He is no longer an employee in the father's business. He is a partner. He does not keep his eye on the clock now, but often he is at work earlier than the employees, and night often finds him still enthusiastically at his work. No task-master is driving him. The hours are forgotten, be no longer measures the spirit of the servant. He gives his all because he is a partner. How patiently God waits for you and me to grow up, for his ultimate goal for His sons and daughters is to become partners with Him. Give us the vision of partnership with Thee, our Father, that we may become co-workers with Thee. Amen.

Feller Puts Tribe Back Into Lead

(By the Associated Press)

Bob Feller came up with one of his better pitching shows yesterday to beat the Red Sox 6-2. He allowed seven hits, struck out eight and yielded only one base on balls.

This boosted the Tribe back into the American league lead.

The Chicago White Sox just managed to edge out the Philadelphia Athletics 6-5 and the St. Louis Browns came from behind to top the Washington Senators 7-3.

The New York Yankees were beaten again yesterday by the Detroit Tigers 6-4.

The Brooklyn Dodgers took up where they left off before the rains came by trimming the St. Louis Cardinals 9-6 in a wild game in which 39 players, a record breaking total, took part.

Two errors helped the Cincinnati Reds to a 3-2 decision over New York.

The Phillies put down a four-run ninth inning uprising by the Chicago Cubs to win 7-5 and the Boston Bees finally scored another triumph—their third—by a 5-1 margin over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

R. H. S. Tennis Players Defeat Salem High, 4-3

The Roseburg high school tennis team defeated Salem high school 4 to 3 in a close and hard-fought tennis tournament Saturday at Salem. The local players, who have been defeated only twice this season, once in a return match with Grants Pass and again by the U. of O. freshmen, gained new experiences at Salem, when they were forced to play part of the tournament indoors.

High wind and rain broke up attempts to hold the matches on outdoor courts, and play was moved indoors where the Roseburg players had their first experience on wooden courts.

Roseburg took three out of the five singles matches and the two schools broke even in doubles. Scores were as follows:

Singles: Carstens (R) versus Carkin (S) 6-1, 6-1; Cacy (R) versus Bressler (S) 6-2, 6-4; Downs (R) versus Sullivan (R) 6-4, 6-4; Nees (R) versus Bressman (S) 6-2, 1-6, 6-1; Sanders (R) versus Anderson (S) 3-6, 2-6, 8-6.

Doubles: Cacy and Carstens versus Carkin and Downs 7-5, 6-2; Bressman and Sanders versus Sullivan and Nees 6-2, 7-5.

The Roseburg team plays University high and Eugene high at Eugene Friday and Saturday, May 10 and 11.

Padres Regain Top Spot in Pacific Coast League

(By the Associated Press)

San Diego yesterday regained the top spot in the Pacific league with 5 to 4 and 11 to 6 victories over Sacramento yesterday, but it took the Padres three extra innings to claim the nightcap.

Hollywood and Los Angeles divided Sunday's games, Los Angeles took the opener, 7 to 4, and Hollywood eked out a nightcap win 3 to 2.

San Francisco split a twin bill with the Oakland Acorns. The Seals won the first 7 to 2 but Oakland came back to take the second, 5 to 4.

In the northwest, Portland won the first game from Seattle 5 to 1, and was trailing 4 to 0 in the second when it was rained out after three innings.

Portland won the opener in the sixth with two runs but gathered three more in the ninth to make it more certain.

Portland won two of the three games played during the week, with rain and a tie game accounting for the others.

Glendale Youth Enters Army Air Corps School

Wesley J. Hayes of Glendale, Ore., has just been selected to pursue a course in armament at the air corps technical school, Lowry field, Denver, Colo., according to an announcement by the commanding officer of Hamilton field, Calif.

Hayes, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hayes, of Glendale, Oregon was born in Vancouver, Wash., and attended Glendale high school, graduating in 1939. He enlisted in the air corps at Medford, Ore., in December, 1939, and has been at the west coast air base in Vancouver since.

The course of instruction Hayes is to undertake will qualify him as aircraft armorer, and will be a boost toward higher rank and pay in his military career. He has been for some time on duty with the 11th bombardment squadron at Hamilton field in the armament section. At Scott field, Ill., he will attend a short preparatory course before entering the regular course at Lowry field.

Derby Loser Tops Preakness "Picks"

NEW YORK, May 6.—(AP)—Although the legend of Bimelich's invincibility was punctured by his defeat Saturday in the Kentucky derby, the colt from Idle Hour farm almost certainly will be the favorite again in next Saturday's running of the Preakness of Pimlico.

It will require more than one licking, in other words, to convince most of the horse players that Bimelich is not the best of an unimpressive lot of three-year-olds. Not that the underrated Gallahadion didn't take Bim's measure fairly and squarely in the derby and run right past him in the stretch.

Bimelich is not, of course, the horse he had been made out. Gallahadion's winning time of 2:05 —more than three seconds off the Churchill Downs track record for the mile and one quarter—made it all too obvious that there were no equine immortals in Saturday's gathering.

Carroll Bierman, the one-time Centralia, Wash., boy, gave Gallahadion a beautiful ride. All the way around he kept him up close to the leaders, rating his mount carefully and saving him for the big effort. When Bimelich swerved out and left the rail clear, Bierman shot into the opening so quickly as to surprise the great crowd. It was obvious in that instant that Gallahadion had the the race won. Bimelich, tiring badly in the last sixteenth, likely would have lost second place to Dit if they had gone another ten yards.

SERIAL STORY

BLACKOUT

BY RUTH AYERS

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

CAST OF CHARACTERS

MARY CARROLL—American fashion expert, in London during wartime.

VINCENT GREGG—soldier of fortune, in love with Mary.

CARLA MARCHETTA—a mysterious London socialite.

DR. GILBERT LENOX—surgeon serving with British army.

CHAPTER V

Mary drew back at the sight of strange eyes staring from the shadows.

Fear paralyzed her for an agonized second and then, bracing herself against the lash of spray, she ran along the darkened deck. Her beret blew off in the wind. Her shoes slipped on the wet floor. And all the time, staccato sharp behind her came hurrying steps. If she could reach the salon door she would be safe.

Panting, she came to the door and swung herself against it. In the muffled light of the room, almost deserted now before the dinner hour, she breathed a quick prayer of relief. The safety of the room gave her courage. Cautiously, she opened the door a crack.

Leaning against the deck rail directly opposite was a man's slouched figure, hat pulled low on his forehead. In the darkness he was nothing more than a silhouette.

Mary waited no longer. When she reached her cabin, her maize hair tumbled on her shoulders and her blue eyes were wide.

Anna, awaiting her, looked up with a shy smile of greeting, then asked quickly, "What's wrong? You're trembling."

"It's nothing," Mary answered. "I'm imagining things. Ever since the boat sailed I've been on edge."

"But something must have startled you. You're white as a ghost."

Mary took off her tweed coat slowly. "You'll probably think I'm crazy, but it's true something did startle me. I could have sworn a man was crouched behind the companionway watching me. And I'm almost sure he followed as far as the salon door."

Anna's hand flew to her mouth in a gesture of fear. "Oh—I wonder what it means. So many strange things are happening in this war that it's enough to make you lose your mind. Spies are everywhere. You don't know when you're being shadowed or why. No one is safe." Then, her gentle voice growing bitter, "I hate war—I hate it. Why must people torture and kill each other?"

She broke into sobs. Mary, sorry at once that she had startled the frail Anna, reached out a comforting hand. "I probably imagined the whole thing. Most likely it was what we call in Yankee slang a 'ripe dream.' Let's forget it."

"And what's more, Anna Winters, we've been moping too much. We've stayed in this cabin as if we were in hiding. We've got to step out—you and I. We'll go up to dinner in a blaze of glory."

Anna looked up uncertainly.

Mary, aware again of how strangely drawn she was to this wisp of an English girl, continued, "I was considered a clever stylist in Paris before the war started. I know what clothes can do to people. We'll dress gorgeously tonight and forget the war."

"That would be fun." Anna's eyes lighted for a second and then sobered. "I'm sorry, but I can't go. All I have are my uniforms and the plainest clothes. I haven't anything for a party."

"But—look! I have trunks full of clothes. I'll pick out a frock that will do exactly for you. You're just about my size and height. When I've dressed you up, you'll be ravishing."

Mary began shuffling through the closet where the beautiful gowns had been hung. Her eyes glistened when she came to the Robin Hood red frock, slim-bodiced and with a skirt that fell in rippling cascades of chiffon.

In the darkness of the closet she pressed its folds to her face. This was the dress she had worn the night when she had first met Vincent. Suddenly, all the rapture of her romance came flooding back.

She remembered Vincent's first words after they had been introduced. "Is it you or the dress that's so gorgeous?" he had asked with that intriguing uplift of his left brow.

Demurely she had answered, "It's the dress." And all the time, of course, she was trying not to show her breathlessness at meeting this gentleman soldier.

Vincent had answered: "Why, to be sure. Probably when I meet you for lunch tomorrow I'll ask myself how I could have thought you were the most beautiful girl I'd ever seen."

It had been like that. Swift, inevitable, a love that had thrown them together in the midst of a war-mad world.

But that was in Paris in September. This was now, aboard the Moravia, plowing through winter seas to New York.

Mary turned to Anna with the red dress. "This is what you're going to wear."

Anna Winters touched the crimson dress. "Oh, no, I couldn't," she protested. "It's too beautiful for me. I'd be out of place in it. I couldn't."

"But you will," Mary said firmly, "and we're going to start right now to make you a knockout."

Anna's brown hair was brushed into a swirl with clusters of curls pinned over her ears to give breadth to the pinched face. All the tricks of the trade Mary had learned as a fashion designer were brought into play.

The new flag-red lipstick, the tawny pale powder, the alluring eye shadow paste—these came out of a kit to make Anna blossom from drabness to charm.

Mary's own shimmery lingerie, sheer stockings, and gold slippers went on her cabin mate. And lastly, the Robin Hood scarlet dress.

Anna Winters gasped as she stared at the mirror. She was lovely!

"There," said Mary, "while Rome burns you're going to dance, Anna. You look like something out of a fairy tale—a beautiful damsel waiting for a Prince Charming to claim you. And who knows, maybe one will."

Anna glowed with an inward, radiant happiness. "I'll wait for you," she said.

Mary shook her head. "No, you're to make your entrance alone. I'll join you later after I've had a chance to make myself properly alluring."

For a minute, the two girls looked at each other—the gentle governess and the American stylist. So unlike, and yet at this minute, so strangely the same. Same slim, graceful figures—same smart coiffeurs, and more—hidden grief in their hearts.

Mary Carroll knew then that this minute would be stamped in her mind for all time. Nothing could ever blot it out. In a lifetime, she would never forget Anna Winters standing before her like a bright red flame—tragic and beautiful.
