Leeks, Chives Give Subtle Onion Tang

To introduce the onion flavor into salads and cooked dishes in a more subtle way than by the outright use of onions, the amateur gardener may grow chives and leeks.

Chives are perennial, and besides producing tubular leaves which add just the right accent to bowl salad and potato cheese, they bear lovely mauve blossoms. You can start them from seeds, or by dividing the roots of established plants, and they will make a most attractive border for a garden path, living many years.

Leeks are always cooked, and many esteem them superior to onions in a stew. They are grown from seed, and should be transplanted for best results. The English gardeners pride themselves on exhibition leeks which may be grown in this manner: When the plants are about as thick as a lead pencil lift them, and set each one in a hole made with a dibber. Do not fill the hole, but merely cover the roots at the bottom with earth and let the hole fill naturally with washed earth. In rich soil the leeks will grow to a diameter of an inch or more.

If you want to accumulate a stock of garlic, assuming your consumption of this article is larger than the average, you can do it by planting the small garlic cloves. Shallots, another form of the onion used chiefly for cooking and having a mild flavor, are grown from sets which may be planted in the fall where the winters are mild, and in the spring in colder states.

Both green and mature onions may be grown from sets or seeds. Sets produce the earliest green onions, and for this purpose they should be planted two to three inches deep, for mature onions not so deep.

All onions are hardy, and Egyptian or perennial onions are true perennials, living many years in

S. Umpqua CCC Plans Fire Fights

Organization of the South Umpqua Falls CCC company for the summer fire season was started last week by Avar Berry, district forest ranger, and John R. Montgomery, project superintendent. Anticipating an early fire season, the forest service officers are preparing an extensive training program, in which the enrollees at the South Umpqua Falls camp will be the first line of defense in that area.

Plans have been made for a special fire squad of one foreman and 10 selected men. This squad will be equipped and rationed for a 48-hour period, and will be kept in readiness to move at a moment's notice.

There also will be prepared a foreman and selected group to act as a squad and crew leaders. A number of squads later will be organized and trained by members of the first group.

Safety Also Included
During the past week, Mr. Berry and Mr. Montgomery, assisted by Jake Smith, discussed the 1939 season, one of the worst in the history of the Tiller district, and outlined plans for meeting similar situations in the future. In addition to the plan for organization of fire squads, steps were taken to provide for safety and welfare of the men while employed on fires.

A field trip was made under the supervision of Mr. Berry and Walter Holbrook, camp fire chief, to three progressive fire line construction sites. They constructed fire line under simulated emergency conditions and received instruction in safety, use of various tools and type of line to construct.

Similar training periods are to be held this week. Persons assisting in the program, other than those previously named, are Ralph Young, John Rondenau, K. Maxwell Byrd and Bruce Ferguson, foremen at the camp.

Corn Show Lists Hybrid Contest

A 1940 state corn show for Oregon, to be held at Oregon State college under much the same plan as was followed last year, has been definitely assured with the agreement by all cooperating agencies to continue their various contributions.

The show will be sponsored again by the state-wide farm organizations in cooperation with Oregon State college and will have the financial backing of Portland cold weather states. They are grown from sets planted in the fall and produce green onions as soon as the ground thaws out in the spring.

Business interests again. Held in connection with the general state show will be the second annual hybrid corn growing contest. This contest is intended to stimulate and promote corn production in Oregon by demonstrating best methods and obtained with profit, says R. E. Fore, head of corn research work in the experiment station.

Any hybrid corn grower in the state of Oregon is eligible if he produces a minimum of three acres in one continuous plot. In addition to cash prizes, a state championship cup will be offered in this contest. Applications are to be turned in to any county agent by June 7, or earlier if possible.

Last year's results in the hybrid corn growing contest demonstrated conclusively that Oregon can produce high yields with low production costs, either east or west of the Cascades.

Returns to Work—Marjorie Knight Watson returned to her work at the Roseburg branch of the U. S. National bank this morning, following several days suffering from influenza at her home on West First street.

But no, it was just "another" good meal at the Imperial or Roosevelt. So don't worry when hubby comes home with that contented well-fed air. Our Chef has been tempting him again with a thick, piping-hot steak or a juicy well-browned chop. You, too, will enjoy an adventure in good eating at one of these fine hotels. Stay at the Imperial or Roosevelt in Portland—just a block or two from the center of things—shops, stores, banks, theatres.
