POET'S CORNER

BIRD CHAT

By LYMAN A. FRITZ

A meadowlark sat on the poultry fence,
Singing a song of joy
While watching the chickens at the food
That was brought by the farmer's boy.
And the meadowlark laughed at the rushing towels
That were being fed by man,
Laughed at their greed and eager speed,
As they followed the boy with the pan.

A robin lit on the fence just then
And said, "It is pretty soft
To have someone to feed you,"
But the meadowlark merely scoffed,
"Ah, yes, my friend they have someone to tend
To every one of their needs,
But they have to pay with eggs
they lay,
Or else there will be bloody deeds."

The moral of this, if moral there be,
Is simply the fact that nothing is free.
The girls on the fence may die of old age,
But the one is awaiting the birds
in the cage,
And if given a choice, which would you be?
