What does its COLOR mean?

The color of a diamond is one of the important qualities which determines its value. Traditionally, a diamond is colorless—and called white, or more often blue-white. Tinges of yellow or brown decrease its worth. Most diamonds emit flashes of bluish "fire," but a diamond actually tinged with blue is a rarity.

We shall gladly show you how these slight differences in color affect the value of diamonds... and shall also explain the importance of cutting, the degree of perfection and carat weight in determining the value of the diamond you are seeking.
