Every state, county and city official or board that handles public money should publish at regular intervals an accounting of it, showing where and how each dollar is spent. This is a fundamental principle of democratic government.

THE whole record of recent years in Europe is written in the tragic fact that there was no place at which those opposed to German aggression could agree to make a stand.

Instructed by that record, there is good hope that the American continents are not going to be caught in the same trap. The most extreme isolationists are now beginning to agree that though the American frontier is not on the Rhine, it is along the whole coast of the two Americas, and on those outlying points whose possession by a foreign power could have no other reason than as a "jumping-off place" for attack on American soil.

Strict border defense has been shown to be impossible. In no country in Europe, not in Poland, Finland, Belgium, Holland, or even France, has a border defense proved practicable. The long-range bomber has destroyed every border in the world.

The other lesson goes further. It is that defense within may be more important than defense from without. The good sense of every American government helping out every other American government threatened by internal disorder guided from abroad is now painfully clear.

Nor is there anything new about this. On Dec. 2, 1823, President Monroe laid down the far-reaching doctrine that bears his name. He asserted "as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power."

But Monroe went further. He added that "we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety." He said we must view as unfriendly "any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any manner their destiny."

That is crystal clear. It was true and sound 117 years ago. It is 29 times true today.

Whatever the result of the war in Europe, the 21 American republics and Canada are determined that no transfer of American soil from one European country to another shall take place. They are determined that no local minorities inspired and partly controlled from abroad shall take over by force local administration. To prevent these things all are united, firmly and resolutely.

The more clearly this is understood in advance, the less likely it is to happen. In the United States, 130,000,000 people. In South America, 50,000,000. In Canada, 11,000,000. If these resolutely take their stand together, now, they need fear nothing.

We of the new world have the right to develop our countries and our lives as we see fit. On this ground, laid out by Monroe 117 years ago, we take our stand.

A LITTLE better than 22 per cent of the money advanced by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to help people save their homes from foreclosure has been paid back. Of a little better than

SERIAL STORY

GHOST DETOUR

BY OREN ARNOLD

CAST OF CHARACTERS ROSELEE DALE and CHRISTINE PALMER—Partners in a summer tourist venture at Goldcrest. DICK LARRAWAY and FRANK LIN LARRAWAY—They also found an interest in Goldcrest.

Yesterday, The girls are worried about Dick's strange movements in the old jail, hiding the money. They are worried too as the romantic complications develop. Franklin says a purse for Christine, she discovers it. He says it is from Dick. Christine wants to cry, realizing Franklin really bought it for her.

CHAPTER XII She hurried off. Tears had actually come, and not for the world would she have had him see them. Franklin Larraway just sat there gazing at Christine Palmer as she walked away from his car. "God!" he muttered to himself. "I sure can miff everybody!"

He hadn't meant for her to see the purse. She hadn't discovered the eliver ring because it was in a smaller package. He picked that up and put it in his pocket and stuck the purse back in his car. He doubted he would have. He Dick diplomatically enough to make him give Christine the purse. He had bought the purse to give Christine himself, but then—well she had practically anticipated being in love with Dick, earlier. And he was Dick's best friend, trusted friend. A man doesn't let his friend down. If Christine loved Dick, and he himself loved Dick as a friend—well then—saw to the devil with it all. Franklin swallowed, and all at once remembered what he had learned about Carl Quait, the robber-murderer. Impulsively he called to Christine again. "Hey! Hey, Christine! Wait! ... Come here a minute!"

She stopped and looked back. She hit her pretty lips to keep from from trembling, she who had been told to cry. "Himmm?" "Come here, please. Look—I got news to tell you, Christine! His voice had dropped to a confidential murmur. "News about that money in the vault. In the cell, none what, I mean."

It wasn't in the mine shaft any more, Christine told herself. But no matter now—what did Franklin have? She came closer to his car. "Get in and sit a minute, Christine. Listen—that money was put here by a pay roll bandit named Quait. He was sent to prison, but escaped and murdered a man. He's at liberty now!"

"No fooling! I went to the sheriff's office and—" He told her all about it. Told her with almost a happy, boyish enthusiasm. Of course Christine found his excitement contagious. She welcomed it, too, because it enabled her to control the other emotions that had stirred her, and so hold back her tears. Franklin had not noticed her crying, though. "Whatever will we do?" she demanded now. "He hasn't shown up yet, but we know he's a dangerous outlaw, free and likely to come any time."

"He's probably been just lying low. People forget about a crook after a while and even the officers get careless if they don't catch him. But Christine, he'll hear about Goldcrest being reopened. The papers have carried it these past few days—I brought a San Francisco paper with your photo and Roselee's and the ghost town's in it. He'll come any night for the money. I'm surprised he hasn't come already. When he does—we must trap him! That $2,000 is a juicy reward!"

They agreed not to tell Roselee lest it unnecessarily disturb her. Christine hinted—without explanation—that Roselee was already distracted about business and personal details. Franklin was curious but too interested in Quait to bother much now. "Just keep quiet and say nothing," he counseled. "I'll make arrangements with Dick."

She turned to him in sudden alarm. "Franklin! You'll—you'll both be very very careful! Promise me!"

He was quite close to her there in his car. Two girls for one, Christine's eyes were lovely, and very striking when far above in them. But now a hurt in his own heart was renewed. He understood what she meant. Understood—he thought—that she was deeply concerned for Dick Bancroft's welfare.

Franklin nudged. "Dick's strong," he almost whispered. "Nobody ever gets the best of him. Don't worry, Christine."

He left her then and went to find Dick. Dick had a group of travelers from Detroit in tow. Two cars of people who were burgled with questions. They represented $5,000 to the Goldcrest Inn, and Dick was trying to be nice to them. He had met them at the highway turnoff that morning by appointment. He knew that such patrons, treated right, could send other customers to the same town. He stayed with them until noon and enabled Mr. Hogan to serve them $5.00 worth of meals and almost as much more in souvenirs.

They had set up an emergency gasoline station, rest rooms, tire repair and cobalt drinks stand at the highway turnoff by the big sign and put a genial old-time roach cook in charge there. He was an admirable salesman for his kind of business, and had sent in many customers for the ghost detour. Before Dick could send his Detroiters away, other cars had come up the rough two miles of dirt road into the old town and
