POET'S CORNER

AT CRATER LAKE

By ALDEN HARNESS

This poem, along with another poem, has been published in bookmark form which has been copyrighted.

A mountain man, as day's brief span
Of bright existence ended,
Down walls of stone, where pale stars shone,
To his canoe descended;
Then on that lake, where thoughts awake
To highest power, he glided;
And peace and love came from above
And in his heart abided.

In sleep awhile on Wizard Isle
Which gems majestic water,
He sensed the laws of perfect Cause,
Revealing that his daughter
Had gained the light that knows no night
Nor darkness in Truth's portal,
Where Spirit gives the live she lives
In worlds of the immortal.

As one in prayer he grew aware
That deathless Liberation
Forever more upon his shore
Had broken limitation;
Then in his dream he saw a gleam
Of light out on the water,
And in that place, with shining face,
Toward him walked his daughter.

Misleading Report on Measles Is Corrected

A recent report from the state board of health of a large number of cases of measles in Douglas county results from a misinterpretation, it was announced today from the local office of the county health department. A statement was issued from the office in the absence of Dr. A. N. Johnson, county health officer, stating that the reason for the high total shown in the state report was due to a cumulative count.

The report, it was said, included all of the cases from one section of the county over a period of several months, rather than for the week ending June 22 for which the report was issued.

"The health office feels that some explanation of this extremely high incidence of measles is due the public," the statement said, adding, "there have been only occasional scattered cases reported for several weeks past."

Siege Looms For Rock of Gibraltar

Spain Probably Will Provide Avenue of Attack by Foes of Great Britain.

By JACK STINNETT

WASHINGTON.—In Washington, the eyes of army and navy war kibitzers are turned to "The Rock."

Will another old saw—"as strong as the Rock of Gibraltar"—have to be torn out of the copybooks because the present European conflict has upset all the traditions of warfare?

To speculate on any possibilities in this war is to stick your neck out, but there's little need for guessing that Gibraltar will be attacked. A. Hitler already has announced his intention to give the Rock to Spain. If he means it it's certainly an indication of his confidence in the Franco government, because with Ceuta across the way, that would give Spain absolute control of the old "Pillars of Hercules," beyond which the ancient Greeks and Romans dared not go, and through which no one since has thought to pass without dipping flags to the powers that controlled them.

However, the world is liable to see a battle for a rock-ribbed pinpoint of land that never has been duplicated in the wars of history.

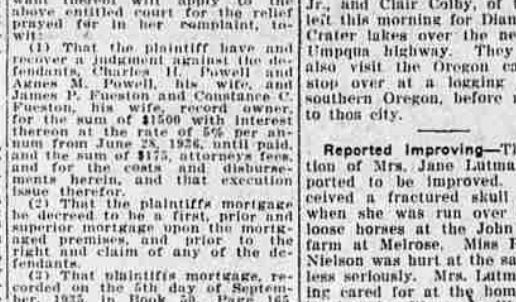
This isn't my conclusion. It belongs to the army and navy departments and is based on known facts as well as the inside information that drifts through the channels of diplomacy.

The reasoning is this: Now that the nazis have subdued France, it's a cinch the Spanish will give them free passage across Spain to attack Gibraltar. With that easy avenue, and the privilege of establishing air bases within a few minutes of the Rock, Gibraltar would have to withstand a siege the like of which it never has seen in all its 2,000 years of war-torn history.

Gibraltar is a rocky sliver of land, 2¼ miles long and from one-fourth to three-fourths of a mile wide. It juts into the Mediterranean just east of the tip of Spain. It rises to 1,400 feet or so at its highest point and there are unscalable heights of 200 feet or more, from deep ocean or sandy plain.

Before the war, about 25,000 people lived in the city proper, located along a narrow beach on the western shore of one of the great harbors of the world. These people are mostly Spanish and Italian by origin, but because of more than 200 years of British rule, intermarriage and prosperity, they are English in sympathies.

Since before the war, in the summer of '39, there has been a feverish activity—refortifying the city and the Rock to meet the exigencies of modern warfare. Now there are ten vast rock caverns, capable of taking care of 1,000 to 1,500 civilians. Food supplies for nearly a year are on hand in these bomb-proof, gas-proof caves, plus millions of gallons of water. Similar provisions have been made for 10,000 soldiers who would man the guns in the galleries of "the Upper Rock."

Gibraltarians are saying now that, if necessary, they can duplicate the ultimate success of that great siege in 1779, when, with only occasional relief, they withstood blockade and frequent attack for almost four years.


Time will tell. But strangest thing of all in this little investigation was the discovery that for years there have been two schools of thought in England—and one is certain that England should abandon the Mediterranean. That "lifeline talk" is just conversation, they say. Going around the Cape may be a little longer, but it's a route that no nation in the world could threaten. For nearly three months, this school of thought has been routing British shipping to India and the Orient.
