Every state, county and city official or board that handles public money should publish at regular intervals an accounting of it, showing where and how each dollar is spent. This is a fundamental principle of democratic government.

Whether the national guard is mobilized for a long term of thorough training or not, it is certain that ordinary training periods will be lengthened, and that in one way or another more and more men are going to be called from normal civilian life to longer periods of military training.

This means that the problem of meeting the dislocations in industrial and personal life will have to be considered as carefully as the military problem itself.

Already it is being proposed that married men in the lower ranks be permitted to resign from the guard if it should launch into an 18-month training period. It is felt that special hardship might be caused in family life if men in the lowest scale of military pay were to leave their families for so long a time.

But the problem goes deeper than that. Should a full year, or an 18-month training period be decided upon, the problem of return to civilian life would be almost as great as that created by a war. In Europe, where every young man spends a couple of years in the army as a matter of course, the training period usually comes before he has established himself in civil life, and the dislocation is therefore less. But here we propose to train the national guard, most of whose members are older and already have found a place in industry or business.

Surely such a man wants to feel that in getting up a year or more of his life voluntarily to his country's service, he does not also forfeit his prospects in his chosen trade or profession. Yet while such men are gone, industry must carry on. The vacant place must be filled, even if temporarily.

Most of the plans hitherto devised were based on a training period not longer than 60 days. That is longer than most guard units trained in the past. But it seems clear that so short a period of training is no longer adequate.

Now many employers are working on the problems of granting leaves of absence for all employees called up for military service. Some are trying to arrange at least two weeks with full pay, some as much as 60 days. Many are trying to plan so as to assure the soldier his job when he returns.

The situation of employees is too diverse, conditions are too various, to lay down any very general rule. But we face what will soon be a fact, not a theory, and it is not too soon for every person involved to begin planning means of sharing as equally as possible the burdens that will come with increased military training.

It's safe to go so... Conspicuous as a PERMANENT institution, has no place in America. It gives too much power to those who are eager to regiment other people's lives.

AN international smuggling ring dumping an estimated annual total of $6,000,000 of illegal drugs into the U. S. has been about broken up, largely as a result of the aid given to the marcolical authorities by an "attractive, middle-aged American woman." (They're afraid to describe her more accurately for fear of reprisals against her.) If all citizens gave all the help possible to the authorities, there would be little crime. (All decent citizens, that is; you couldn't expect the crooks and the stickers to help.)

OUT OUR WAY

HIGH TIDE By Frances Hanna

YESTERDAY: Jan enjoys her evening at the beach ballroom with Derek. That same evening, Rose comes home intoxicated. Lance is furious but demands that Rose kiss him.

"I couldn't help it," she whispered. "I heard her come in." "Well, I don't care whether you saw or not," he shouted, his emotions quite beyond control. His hands shook, and his face was livid. "I've been buried alive for two years. Two years! I know she doesn't care a damn for me, I know I can't give her anything, but I'm going to take what I can get. It might have to last me a lifetime!"

In silence she wheeled him back into his room, left him, and went on into her own room to creep again between the covers, now child and damp.

Rose woke late with a headache. Before she came completely awake her conscience began nagging her with guilty post-mortems. Vaguely, yet clearly enough, she remembered the scene in the hallway with Lance. Johnny's family she decided had colored on her mixing her drinks. Should have known better. Rose, my honey lass! Member the last time, rather the first time, you experimented that way? It kipped you out of a nice, solid fortune.

Making a wry face she stungled up, held her whirling head in her hands, then observed that the wrinkled mass of tangled-colored crepe that had been an expensive evening gown. Taking it off over her head she reflected she should be grateful to whomever it was, Jan most likely, for putting her in bed and covering her up and pulling over her velvet sandals. How that fortnight, moonlighted, youngster must despise her.

Stripping off all her clothing, donning a satin robe, Rose pushed her heavy black hair off her face, pinned it back, and rubbed a thick layer of pink cold cream, scented with expensive, into her skin. Then she made a dash for the bathroom.

She found a big, yellow, sticky, fishy, day-for-a-handicapped, Greek widow—handsome if she could erase those dark circles under her eyes. Still, they might be considered intriguing.

"I'm thirty," she thought, taking herself to task as she soaped her cream with them. "It's been twice married and twice divorced. Its high time I did some thing about getting my insecure future."

'Swell Fight' Here was Rose reflected, not an unusual story. A runaway marriage at seventeen to a boy of twenty. Too much love, too much quarreling and too little sense. Disillusionment and ill-luck at nineteen. A determination to make all men pay for the hurt one man had caused her. Biting her fingers, learning, hardening. Working as model in wholesale houses, then shops, then saloons. Learning clothes and how to wear them. The growing greed for possessions. Then Herman's arrival.

Herman had been a sagging, rascally fifty. He had fair hands and light, suspicious eyes. But he had enormous amounts of money and he wanted to marry her. Well, she'd stuck it eight years. At first the clothes, the summer house, the winter house, the servants, the traveling had made it worth while. Then they had. They were men who attracted her, but her greed for possessions prevented her from attempting this sort of escape. For Herman was very watchful and Herman was exceedingly jealous.

If she hadn't mixed her drinks that night and told him she'd never consent to have a child, never under any circumstances, the scolding denunciation struck like the pitch-soaked kindling of repression in her and she had snatched her hate at him.

He permitted her to divorce him at Reno after she'd signed a settlement. Such a little settlement! Considering Herman's vast wealth, he'd given her only a pair of blue jeans, sneakers, and a jaunty off-fleece cap. From his waist to his flaring hair he was as evenly brown as if he'd been painted by a spray gun. Also, he'd picked up an astounding vocabulary of fisherman's lingo and delighted in trying it out on her at breakfast when they had the kitchen to themselves.

A great deal of the bitterness had gone out of his talk and manner. A few days ago he'd asked her to play for him and he'd listened without growling, barking and baring his teeth. Timidly, she urged him to play. He refused, but his refusal was only a shrug, no outburst of words. Encouraged, she asked, "Just what do you harbor against Chopin?" You said once you couldn't bear him.

"I can't. His music hurts me. I haven't lived a long time ago only to perfect myself in the playing of his Polishness in A Flat Major."

'I'm a Miasia!' Another time, setting his teeth into his favorite subject, the chaos and helplessness of the world, the growing decadence of civilization, she had checked him with:

"Derek, it's the misfits who rant on soap boxes. Busy people, happy people, useful people, haven't the time nor the desire to tell the world how lousy it is!"

He'd thought a while. Then: "Maybe you've got something there, Jan. I'm a misfit if there ever was one! But it isn't my fault."

"Perhaps not, but if you keep on being a misfit it's certainly your fault!"

"Is this fitting in, then? This existing to eat and sleep and labor with my hands?"

"You can look out of your tent at night and see the stars," she said. "You can watch the sunrise and sunset and look at that ocean out there and realize how little and unimportant you are. You can dream."

"Philosophy is cold. You know, Jan, it's a funny thing—I hate the idea of manual labor, but I—like it. It does something to me. Something good, something useful. I'm warning my salt and incidentally my own self, Derek. Lord, I sound like an Horatio Alger hero!"

Lying on his cot, relaxed, feeling the salt breeze fan her skin, thoughts and words all ran to Derek, stealing guiltily through the house two hours later, thinking he had escaped detection, found her there. One arm was crooked under her head, the other dangled off the edge of the cot. Small and childlike and demure, she seemed to sleep. Her lashes lay thick and dusky against her soft golden cheek; her sensitively-curved pink lips pointed with dreams; her hair powdered yellow over the pillow.

His eyes, watching so intently, woke her. He murmured drowsily, sitting up, rubbing her temples. She had a good look at him. A small shriek escaped her. "Derek! For heaven's sake, what happened to you?"

He grinned and bared his teeth. "No, I didn't hit him but I bumped up and told him a few things about his rotten old tubs and the first mate got on it—his always hated me, anyhow—and then a couple of other fellows took sides and it turned into a free-for-all," he related. "Gosh, it was fun. I feel glorious. I haven't had a fist fight for years!"

Sunday Churches at the

DAILY DEVOTIONS DR. CHAS. A. EDWARDS

The reason that the church of today is impotent before the forces of evil, is because Christ's followers have failed to possess Him as an active spiritual power. It is not enough to think, act and speak in the spirit of Jesus. We must be active agents of His spirit. The disciples of old received the Holy Spirit. This experience was so definite that they were conscious of it. All of us are capable of this wonderful experience. If we will only repent of our sins, and submit ourselves to His will. We desire an outburst of fresh enthusiasm, but we need more of new spiritualization. We can influence each other, but we cannot spiritualize ourselves. A spiritual impulse must be given to us from on high. We, therefore, must repent and possess Him in us that we, too, like the disciples, may go out to change the world through Him who makes all things new. Let us guard our thoughts with reverence, and fear, lest we run counter to God's will, and cast away our opportunity to promote His kingdom. Amen.

Heirs in Germany Will Get Oregon Estate Fund

PORTLAND, July 25.—(AP)—Twelve heirs residing in Germany will receive $40,452 from the estate of the late Kola Neis, an Oregon hops and brewery supply merchant.

Circuit Judge James W. Crawford, ruling in a test case, today released the trustees from restrictions of an Oregon law preventing distribution on the grounds that Germany did not allow money to leave its borders. Robert Clostermann, attorney for the German heirs, asserted that reciprocity existed between the United States and Germany. He cited recent cases to show that American citizens had received money from Germany.

Postman Hits Back When Bitten by 27th Canine

PORTLAND, Ore., July 25.—(AP)—Twenty-six dogs have bitten Postal Carrier Lowery Huey, 46, in 15 years and has been cited recent cases to show that American citizens had received money from Germany.

The judge deferred sentencing Huey, who was convicted of damaging personal property. The heirs the postman buried killed Mrs. John G. Lake's dog. Huey testified that he acted in self defense, explaining that dogs, without provocation, chased him on an average of twice a year.

South Douglas Pheasant, Quail Shooting to Open

Hunters will be privileged to shoot chin pheasants and valley quail again this fall in Jackson, Josephine, Croos and the southern half of Douglas county, just as was the rule last year, the state game commission reports.

While the remainder of western Oregon is closed to shooting of upland birds, the commission, acting on the advice of the attorney general, followed the legislative act which provides for shooting of these birds in the counties named. The bird season this fall will extend from October 15 to 31, inclusive.
