New Furs Look Like Luxury Garments, But They Are Priced For Mrs. Smallbudget

FLATTERING PELTS AND CLEVER STYLING GIVES LOW-COST COATS NEW SMARTNESS

By MARIAN YOUNG
NEXA Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK—It's more true than ever this year that fur—nice, rich-looking, flattering fur—is not beyond the means of Mrs. Smallbudget.

Midsummer fur sales include a wide variety of smart, low-budget-priced coats and jackets which will give their wearers the same feeling of pampered luxury that mink and sable give Mrs. Farbudget.

A FUR COAT FOR FOOTBALL OR CHURCH

The woman with an eye for good value will reward the fur coat selection of Mary Martin, screen and radio singer. Miss Martin makes it a rule to buy double-duty clothes, and her preferences in fur are no exception to this rule.

The little actress likes a moderately priced kidskin sweater, coat with a hood, because, with the hood up, it's right for football games and late fall drives in the country, and with hood down in cool collar street, it's just as right for church on Sunday or for regular daytime wear.

Ocelot is another moderately-priced fur which the budget-minded favor. It's soft and light, and it wears well, too, particularly stunning coat combines ocelot and brown suede. The suede forms a cordian neckline, narrow panels down the front and a set-in belt.

REMEMBER THAT A COAT IS PERENNIAL

Miss Martin likes an Alaska sealskin, and in the new and immensely choice blanket length. A practical choice for one who has to count her pennies is a medium-length Alaska sealskin coat in the neutral shade marten, which looks well with every color.

Silver muskrat and mink-blended muskrat are featured in the outfit fur departments. And so is skunk. The skunk cardigan which looks well over afternoon and evening dresses, as well as sports and day clothes, is a practical investment. It wears and wears and wears, as do muskrat and sealskin, and a cardigan jacket isn't likely to go out of style and require remarking.

Mink-blended muskrat, cut on handsome swagline, makes Mary Martin's reasonably-priced coat for winter 1940. It is full length, with bell-shaped sleeves.

Incidentally, unless you know

Colorful ocelot fur and brown suede are combined to make this stunning, budget-priced coat. The suede forms a cordian neckline, panels down the front and a set-in belt.

You won't mind spending a fairly good-sized chunk of money next year to remodel this year's fur coat, better look for classic styling, indulge your fancy for highly styled effects and novelties in scarfs and other accessories, even dresses to wear with your fur coat—but not in the coat itself. Choose something which you are pretty sure will be wearable year after year.

Low in price but high in style is this gray kidskin coat, modeled by Mary Martin of the movies. The attached hood may be worn up—or down, as shown above.

Skunk makes it debut into the best of society. And Mary Martin wears it here in a three-quarter, collarless evening wrap. It may be worn over day clothes.
