POET'S CORNER

MOON RISE
Faint, dark spotted, fantastic—
The curtain of clouds over the mesa.
First a faint glow, then brighter,
A faint tip, so faint, then larger,
Slowly, breathlessly, silently
It slides over the top of the mesa
And slides into the sky where it hangs
Suspended a moment—
The world stops,
In reverent silence it worships
The breathless beauty and splendor
Like the moon.
Like life, and love, and hope—
The dark, fantastic cloud curtain—
Dark, then faint light, then lighter,
Lighter and lighter and lighter
Until at last—
The moon rises.

Accompanied by Ward Gano, regional bridge engineer from the Portland office, and Marion Nelson of the local staff, Mr. Harpham left Monday, going by way of Steamboat to Diamond lake, over the North Umpqua route and returning last night by way of Union creek and the Tiller-Trail cut-off.

There is practically no snow at Diamond lake and only a few patches to be found along the roadways. Mr. Harpham stated.

Mr. Gano came to Roseburg to consult with the Umpqua National forest staff on plans for the bridge to be constructed this winter across Copeland creek. The new bridge will be about 100 feet in length and will be on low trestles with a flat deck. It will be built upstream from the present temporary bridge and on a higher elevation, eliminating the present steep approaches.
