New Year's

When old time swings wide the portal, Ushering in the glad New Year, We who listen, hear a whisper At the midnight, soft and clear.

Here's a new leaf I am giving For your book of life, again, - Free it is from spot or blemish, Ready for your waiting pen.

May each page record a blessing You've bestowed on those in need, Just a kind word or an action, Warm hand clasp or loving deed;

Then you'll hear the loving Father In the days that are to be, Saying: "As you give to others, You are giving unto me."

This timely poem for the New Year was sent to me among a group of poems written by my mother, Mrs. Geo. R. Varney. They are too lovely to hide away. This one expresses the thoughts of the American Legion auxiliary at the holiday season better than I can. The rush is over, we have had time to collect our thoughts and realize that it was all very much worth
