 People win wars, and a spirit such as that being displayed by the British cannot be crushed by mere glittering efficiency controlled by a cruel dictator.

"Whereupon we will develop very thoroughly the plans we have made."
 Did you ever hear of a coach, making a pep talk to his football warriors between halves, predicting anything but victory?
 If Hitler should make a speech predicting German defeat, it would be SOMETHING.

THE Italians have been hitting the Greeks pretty hard in Albania, and the Greeks assert to day that Mussolini himself is on the ground pouring it onto his generals.
 He is said to have given them until Saturday to do something—OR ELSE.
 That rumor is interesting. It is said that Mussolini, realizing that if he is licked in Albania he can hope for no pie, has been holding Hitler back from attacking Greece.
 Maybe the "or else" is a last threat before giving the go ahead sign to Big Brother Adolf.

Pythias hall beginning at 8 o'clock. This party will emphasize the Legion's 22 years of service to the community and bring the auxiliary's pledge of continued support in this work.

Mrs. Roy O. Young and Vincent Malone are joint chairmen for the affair, which will feature an interesting program highlighted by a talk by Floyd Crittenden, popular legionnaire. Our junior group has prepared a clever skit—the fellows from the legion will indulge themselves in some barber shop chorts, there will be dancing and then—those two big angel cakes, the size of two dishpans from the Days Creek chefs. We won't have to tell you not to miss this grand get-together.

All day today, members of the auxiliary have been visiting registration headquarters at Roy Young's office, where Mrs. Young has been in charge. The questionnaires contain 45 questions relating to special skills which might be useful in emergency service, locally or nationally. A few of the questions asked include: "Can you drive a car?" "Can you provide skilled nurse service?" "Can you do secretarial duties?" Other questions relate to canteen work, social service, feeding of the homeless, sewing, knitting, mending and teaching. Mrs. Young reports great interest in this program among members of Umpqua unit.

Members of Umpqua post and unit are looking forward with more than ordinary pleasure to the official visit of our past department president, Mrs. William Horstfall on Monday and Tuesday of next week. Mrs. Horstfall, whose home is in Marshfield is now serving as national defense chairman.

On Monday evening Mrs. Horstfall will be honor guest of the Roseburg Junior Woman's club. Tuesday evening at 5 p. m. she will speak over KRNR on the subject of "National Defense." In the evening at 6:30 in the banquet room at the army, she will be honored at a potluck dinner, followed by a business meeting in the chapter rooms. Mrs. Horstfall is one of the best loved of American Legion Auxiliary members and is just one more reason why so many of us are proud of our membership in this grand order.

Members of Umpqua unit are being urged by Mrs. Claude Baker president, to present themselves as soon as possible to Mrs. Viola Blessing, bacteriologist in the Medical Arts building to have their blood typed for possible blood donorship. This is one of the highest types of service that can be rendered. Strong men and women are needed and in addition, those who are more or less permanently located in Roseburg, so that they may be available in time of need. Besides testing the blood for type, Mrs. Blessing will test for the presence of contagious diseases. Also a vaccine will be made which may be used for cold immunization. Contrary to general opinion, the process of transfusion involves no pain or danger. As a matter of fact, a stimulating effect is noted. Of the four types, the so-called 3's and 1's are the most difficult to find. One never knows just when a transfusion might be necessary to save the life of some loved one so auxiliary members and friends plan to cooperate in this grand civic enterprise.

SERIAL STORY DUDE COLLEGE

BY OREN ARNOLD

YESTERDAY: A mysterious visitor watches flames rise from the Bailey ranch house, sees the men in the hangars rush to fight the fire. Swiftly he hurries to the planes, cuts the bomb sight free from its fastenings. He makes careful measurements, then disappears. The woman who accompanied him had done a good job building a fire.

WES SAVES A LIFE CHAPTER XXIV

Ronnie Bailey darted across the smoke-hazed living room and opened the door leading to the big hall.

In an instant she was enveloped in a black cloud. The force of it was audible, like some gas giant suddenly released from captivity.

The six other girls near Wesley broke then in a literal stampede. One grabbed Wes himself, hugging him from the side and clawing wildly at his shoulder like a drowning person. Two others were sobbing in weird little hysterical noises even as they fled and one girl jumped, insensibly, onto a chair. The smoke-filled hallway, licking now with increasing tongues of flame, seemed to hold Wesley spellbound.

Ronnie had just stepped back to safety when Wes cried out. "Mr. Bailey—where is he? ... Your father!"

Ronnie was coughing but she pointed through the smoke and shrieked back, "Upsairs! ... There!"

She might well have shouted to Mr. Bailey in person, for his voice answered. In the crackling and roaring now he seemed very far off.

"Ronica!" he was crying in desperation. "Ronica! ... RONICA! Get out! Everything is burning! It's all around me and—" He broke off in a sudden fit of coughing and gasping.

Wesley had run to the dining room door, opened it and closed it. He ran now to a second door at the end of the big living room, opened it a crack and slammed it shut, too.

"Smoke and flame everywhere!" he shouted. "The hallway is cut off! MR. BAILEY!"

They heard no answer. Ronnie ran to the hallway door again anyway and would have plunged into the black gases there but for Wesley. He jerked her back.

"It will kill you, Ronnie!" he warned. "We must—I—here! Here!"

He had glanced quickly around. Stretched diagonally and beautifully on the rustic wall of this living room was a Mexican serape, a woolen fabric six feet long and a yard wide, knit by hand in gorgeous stripes and patterns. In one arm motion he jerked it down.

On a table a vase held two dozen roses, a gift to Ronnie from Andre Girardeau, but Wesley didn't know that. Wes threw them out, took the vase and poured water over the crumpled serape. In another instant he had put the damp cloth around his head and disappeared in the hall blackness.

He heard more shoutings. He had a vague impression of the fleeing girls, but he knew these new noises were the voices of men. He could hear his own shoes pounding up the wooden stairs, and when he felt he should be at the top he yelled again, "MR. BAILEY!"

Air under his improvised hood had become exhausted, especially when he opened a crack to look out. He could see nothing, and he dared not inhale. But he shouted once more, "MR. BAILEY!"

He still got no answer, the floating death was tangible now. He could literally feel the soot as well as the hot gases, and up here the flames roared as if blown to a fury by some huge forge. This, his orderly mind knew, was due to a normal suction up the insides of hollow interior walls and up the wall of the stairway itself. He knew that the stairs had been burning underneath because flames had touched his feet and ankles.

A man can hold his breath a minute or more in emergency, Wesley York had powerful lungs from long practice in swimming. Opening his eyes brought only pain, no visual help.

Hence up here on the second-story landing, Wesley did a characteristic thing, he paused to think—literally to force calm reasoning. Mr. Bailey had been awakened in his room, no doubt. He had thought of Ronnie and run out. They had heard him call, and stop short. Where, then, would he have been overcome? To Wes it seemed logical that Bailey should be here on the landing itself, perhaps within a few feet even now.

That deduction took but a flashing second or so. Wes dropped to hands and knees, feeling. He swung one leg in an arc, reached everywhere with his hands.

"Unff!" he suddenly granted,

DAILY DEVOTIONS

DR. CHAS. A. EDWARDS

Our Father in heaven, who hast made all things beautiful in their times, we bless Thee for the hope of Spring, that in the cold heart of winter, We praise Thy name, for the reconciliation of our Lord Jesus Christ, that has bound all created things and life unto Thyself, making Thy universe one, and ruling it by the law of atoning love. We thank Thee for memory, which in our pensive moods flashes on the inward eye the imagery of things seen, and brings the bliss of beautiful things to bless our solitude. We praise Thee for powers of the imagination, that can forecast the good things yet to be, touched by the spirit of faith. Help us to consider well the flowers that are treasured up in the future. May the winter of our discontent be made glorious by the sun of hope, and the beauty of the flowers that are yet to be. Help us, our Father, to cease from our toiling and spinning, from sowing and reaping, and gathering into barns with undue and anxious care, seeking as mere mouldings of a pagan mind what we shall eat, what we shall drink, and what we shall wear. When all these things shall be bestowed upon us, if we but make Thy kingdom and righteousness our first pursuit. Grant that the darkness as the shadow of death may speedily pass away that we may live in the light and life of God. Amen.

The courage of British civilians now under fire is not outdone by the record of British soldiers and sailors down through the centuries. The News-Review has printed several letters received here from British friends and relatives of local people. All such letters have the same general tone—a cheerful, dogged determination to see the thing through, and do it without complaining.

C. H. Arundel, who was born and raised in England has five brothers and numerous other relatives living there, most of them in Birmingham, the industrial city that has taken considerable bombing. We are indebted to Mr. Arundel for the privilege of reading several letters written by his people. Space will not permit the reproduction of them here. The story they told, and it was identical in all of them, may be summed up in the following composite quote: "It is nasty business now, but our R. A. F. is holding its own with the enemy and we are going to win sooner or later—but meanwhile, we will pay as little attention as possible to the whole business and
