

Increase in U. S. Taxes Under Study By Treasury Dept.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—(AP)—High treasury officials said today they were considering asking congress to increase some existing federal taxes, but they minimized the possibility of any new levies such as sales or payroll tax.

Among those which may be raised, they hinted, were income, excess profits, estate and gift taxes. Some changes in specific excise taxes, such as those on liquor and tobacco, also were deemed possible. Treasury-congressional conferences on the tax problem are scheduled about April 1.

More sensational plans for raising money have been bruited about by congressmen and others. The suggestions have included a 5 per cent tax on all wages, to be deducted by employers, and a general sales tax, to be paid by manufacturers.

Treasury officials said they doubted if a majority of the lawmakers would agree to such innovations.

The treasury, as well as congress, is searching intently for more revenue because the British aid program has boosted the next fiscal year's outlay to more than $20,000,000,000 while the most optimistic estimates of the government's income during that period do not exceed $10,000,000,000, taking account of tax increases which were effective this year, and the upturn in business.

The treasury was particularly skeptical of a sales tax. Officials predicted that before congress would pass such a levy, it would exempt foods and so many other items that the tax yield would be disappointing.

Their opposition to a "payroll tax" was based on the belief it would discriminate against persons who work for wages and favor persons who get their income from investments or real estate.
