POET'S CORNER

The following sonnet was published in The Oregonian some time ago:

WAR PASSED THIS WAY
This is the land I knew; this fertile soil
Torn and betrayed by dark and evil days.
Once flowers set the countryside ablaze,
And trees yearned skyward. Now the sharp recoil
Of outraged nature grimly tends to foil
The customary verdure of her ways.
And blackened earth rebelliously delays
The green forgetfulness that cancels toil.

This land I knew when life was sweet and sane;
This land I loved and cherished as a friend.
Now recognition falters; to what end
Has ruin fallen on this friendly plain?
War passed this way and scattered seeds of grief—
Heartbreak for wheat, and tears for bud and leaf.
—Marjorie Hunt Pettit.
