Oregon Selective Service Offices Deluged With Letters of Inquiry That Range From the Comic to the Tragic

SALEM.—(AP)—Hundreds of letters, ranging from the funny to the tragic, have been received by state selective service headquarters here, many of them written by persons who either want to locate strayed husbands or who give advice as to why there should be no draft.

In spite of many announcements that it cannot act as a missing persons bureau, selective service headquarters still gets lots of letters from persons who want to locate friends and relatives.

One of the most unusual letters was from a woman who wanted to make sure that her son-in-law would be drafted, and that the police of many states, federal officers and newspapers were looking for him. She asked Wooten's help, but four days later, she wrote that her husband had been found.

Another woman, very much worried, asked, and got, Wooten's cooperation in preventing her neighbors from finding out that her husband was not the father of her two sons.

In 1911, the woman, who had two small sons, divorced her husband, and remarried. The sons, although not adopted by the new husband, used his name.

Wooten made the woman happy by saying the sons could register under their adopted names, rather than by their real names.

Many cards and letters, mostly unsigned, come from persons opposed to selective service.

Deserted Wives Ask Money
There are many letters from wives, whose husbands have deserted them, asking that the husbands be drafted and the money turned over to the wives.

A girl wrote to Wooten asking if she could join the army ambulance corps, but Wooten told her that is a man's job. Another girl wanted to be a pharmacist in the army.

200 Million Trees Only Starter In Shelter Belt Plan

By ROBERT E. GEIGER
Associated Press Feature Service
Writer

LINCOLN, Neb.—The greatest U. S. tree planting job of the spring is the setting out of an additional 35,000,000 trees in the prairie states shelterbelt.

In six years approximately 200,000,000 trees will have been planted in this six-state project, Canada to Texas, to create a natural barrier against the strong winds, hot and cold, that blow across the plains.

The trees have been planted in strips which, if placed end to end, would reach 16,000 miles. They protect 27,930 farms.

This six-year accomplishment is but a scratch on the surface of the tree planting job the United States department of agriculture recommends.

At least 2,500,000,000 additional trees are needed solely for protective purposes, department officials say.

The shelterbelt program was started in 1935, amid controversy over its effectiveness, when the plains country had a dust bowl.

Some proponents suggested trees were the most effective means of breaking the strong winds that were sweeping the powder-dry top soil from the thousands of acres.

Idea Dates Back to '73
The idea wasn't original with the "drought busters" of the 1935 new deal administration.

Homesteaders, planted millions of trees, encouraged in part by the timber act of 1873, offering an additional 160 acres provided a portion was planted to trees. The first scientific governmental forestry organization was set up primarily to deal with the plains tree problem.

The government and early settlers had little success in getting trees to grow in great numbers because of the dry conditions. It wasn't until the drought of 1934 that the problem became acute.

Two-Thirds Survive
Experts now have developed methods through which the shelterbelts thrive and make effective windbreaks. More than two-thirds of the trees planted in the approved areas have survived.

Roughly, the shelterbelts are being planted across the eastern portions of North and South Dakota and Nebraska, across central Kansas, western Oklahoma and a strip of Texas.

How Planting Protects
Each shelterbelt is planned so that it protects farm fields on the side from which the prevailing winds blow. A field shelterbelt is a long line of trees and shrubs, from three to ten rows in width and extending the length of the field.

The lowest shrubs are planted on the outside; the tallest trees in the middle of the strip. Thus the wind is lifted upward.

The forest service raises 35 varieties of trees in nurseries and plants them, with relief labor, in ground prepared by farmers on the farmers' property.

Lewis and Camp Murray are unpatriotic. His "proof" was that the kind of measles many of the soldiers had was German measles. A good American soldier, he reasoned, might get measles, but if he were patriotic, he wouldn't get measles of the German variety.

Whenever a newspaper prints a story about sickness at any army camp, a soldier being killed or injured in an automobile accident, or a soldier getting into difficulties with the police, Wooten gets an unsigned epistle asking him "what do you think of the selective service law now?"

Wooten still thinks the law's all right, but even if he didn't, he couldn't do much about changing it. Congress passed it; he didn't.

That's the Hurry

SAN FRANCISCO.—Roscoe Withers had an alibi for speeding 85 miles an hour.

He was visiting his girl friend. Her cough sent her to the medicine cabinet. She selected the wrong bottle and drank camphorated oil. Withers rushed her to the emergency hospital where a stomach pump relieved her distress.

"Sure I was going eighty-five," he told the traffic court judge, "and I would have gone faster if the car could."

Case dismissed.
