POETS CORNER

MEMORIAL DAY REVERIE

W. Taylor Cooper
With the noiseless tread of myriad feet,
No call of the bugle, no war drum beat,
Through the silence out yonder,
Deep and vast,
March the armies of all the ages past.

With no blast of trumpet or roll of drum,
The ranks of the armies of mothers come,
War gods demand seas of blood as their price,
And the mothers bear sons for sacrifice.

Next the wives and children,
Waiting in vain
For husbands and fathers among the slain,
And the pallid faces of sweet-hearts, too,
With their dreams of homes that never came true.

An unnumbered host died for causes just,
But legions perished because of the lust
Of tyrants who would for one little hour,
With human life, sate their greed for power.

Ever they're passing in endless array,
And again on this Memorial Day,
Through the lifting mist in that Silence vast,
We see marching, the armies of the past.
