No Economics in a Vacuum

THERE has been a great deal of discussion of the possible economic position of the United States in the case of a Hitler victory in Europe.

Could the United States, or could it not, compete with an economy managed from Germany which included slave populations and resources throughout the whole of Europe? One side of the argument says, no, that it would be the death of free enterprise in the United States, which would have to adopt totalitarian principles in order to do business with the world at all.

A great deal of this argument is unrealistic in that it avoids the central fact of trade under the Nazi system. The fact, and it is a new fact in the study of economics, is the complete intermingling of foreign policy, local politics, and economics with what used to be a simple competitive trade matter.

It might well be argued that the United States could compete with the best a Nazi Germany could offer, even if that system had the resources of a forcibly-united Europe at its disposal. Provided free competition were possible, and provided that the United States were willing to adjust its standard of living in some relationship to whatever standard of living the Nazis might impose on Europe, it might be possible. But it seems useless to make these calculations in a vacuum.

The Nazis have no idea of competing on what we have always regarded as a free basis with other economies. They worm their way in. They work internal political pressure to slant trade in favor of their economy, and this goes as far as internal revolution or the threat of it, to say nothing of bribery, "loss leader sales," exclusive privileges, and every technique of political and social pressure which gives them the bulge on anyone who wishes to compete as a matter of straight business.

All calculations on whether or not the United States could compete with a Nazi European economy on any kind of a fair business basis are useless. The Nazis don't do business that way. They never have, and there is not the slightest sign that they ever intend to.

The Growing State Guards

FEW people realize how rapidly the State Guard idea has been growing. Twenty-eight states including Oregon now have such guard units, with authorized strength of more than 110,000 men. Roughly half of these are now getting weekly instruction, the Council of State Governments finds.

Each state has its own law establishing such guards, with the result that there is considerable variation in matters like uniforms, which run from blue through khaki to "Confederate Gray" in South Carolina.

As they become better organized, trained and equipped, they should provide the complete answer for any groups who are tempted to function on an amateur vigilante basis. For these there is no place. Only regularly authorized, responsible law-enforcement and protection services have any place in today's picture.

ments in fighting of ANY kind. Ring fans are fundamentally familiar with the fact that the fighter who "telegraphs his punches" doesn't get far. When a telegraphed punch arrives, the other fellow is pretty certain to have the threatened place covered.

It works the same way in war. So when a big drive is in the making, the maker of it resorts to every possible device to confuse and mislead.

WITH eyes on every side, with spies planted in almost every conceivable spot, with modern communication facilities swift and efficient, even the most rigid censorship, can't wholly cover up the troop movements and other preparations necessary for a big push.

Rumors are BOUND to get out. One way to cover up is to inspire so MANY rumors that it will be hard to sort out from the mass those that are really significant.

For that reason, the fact that the air has been full of rumors for days—rumors of every sort, coming from every direction—is fairly dependable evidence that something important is brewing. Trying to guess what is like trying to pick a needle out of a haystack.

NEWS can be censored. Rumors can be manufactured. Propaganda can be (and constantly is) peddled. But the map doesn't lie. Britain holds Egypt and Suez and Iraq. Russia holds the Ukraine with its wheat and Baku with its oil. Turkey holds the key to the land gate to Iraq and its oil and to Suez and Egypt. Your map tells you this, and what it tells you can't be censored or covered up by false rumors and propaganda.

PUT this down in your day book:

Turkey is in for trouble. If the Germans can't get around Turkey by promises or by threats or by compelling Russia to bring pressure to bear, Turkey will sooner or later be the bloody scene of another blitzkrieg.

AND you might as well put this down:

Russia has what Germany wants—food, oil and raw materials with which to defeat the purpose of the British blockade. If Russia doesn't come through voluntarily with what Germany wants, what she has will sooner or later be taken by force.

Demonstration Program By Bible School Dated

A demonstration program by the Daily Vacation Bible school of the First Presbyterian church will be held Friday night at 8 o'clock. The children who have attended the school will present the work which they have been doing. Each group will recite the memory work learned in the class period. Gospel choruses which the children have learned is to be an attractive part of the program. All the work has been centered in the Book of Acts, and part of the exercises will consist of questions and answers on the entire book. The junior department is to dramatize "The Opening of the Gospel Door." Miss Helen R. Carlson, who has been the Bible school director, will present awards at the close of the program. All parents and friends of the children are cordially invited to attend.
