POET'S CORNER

The following poem was published in Tumbleweed.

STAR-GAZER

If I had known
The soul's eternal hunger,
I might have gathered stars
When I was younger—
I could have stored them
In some secret fastness,
And grown, in time,
To realize their vastness.
But now they hang so high—
At such a distance,
I cannot reach them
In this small existence.
—Marjorie Hunt Pettit.

PRESTO!

Short hours ago this valley,
And all that grows therein,
Was gay and patched with color
As any harlequin.

What genii wrought this magic—
To quench in one brief night
The vivid flame of autumn
With winter's sparkling white?
—Marjorie Hunt Pettit.
