Change in Canadian Regulations Is Urged

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—(AP)—A dozen senators were disclosed today to be working for modification of Canadian government restrictions which curtail spending by Canadians in the United States.

Senator White (R., Me.), a leader of the movement, said Canada had forbidden its nationals to spend any money in this country for other than business purposes. He said that even when a Canadian desires to come to the United States on business his government puts a limit on the amount of money he can spend.

A group of senators from states bordering Canada met recently and empowered White to pick a committee to discuss the matter with the state department and Canadian diplomatic authorities here.

"The situation is a real mess," White said in an interview. "The Canadian restrictions have caused a devil of a lot of trouble. There are many towns which are dependent upon Canadian trade. Their entire economy has been built on that trade."

"Of course, Canada has imposed the restrictions to support her own currency, but there is a question of whether she would not be better off to let a few million dollars come to this country. She certainly would be better off from the standpoint of friendly relations."

White said that Maine, Washington and Michigan were among the states "hard hit" by the Canadian restrictions.
