The world has been told that German soldiers have been kept on the front line until they dropped from exhaustion, because the Russians had cut communication lines and prevented the bringing up of reserves and replacements.

These so-called news releases have been issued persistently, day after day. They usually were not featured but were made secondary to other war news. Such a position would only serve as emphasis in the minds of the readers by lessening their appearance of being fantastic.

In contrast, the Germans claim one million men captured and three million killed. As commentators point out, such ures would indicate the total destruction of the entire Russian army when the usual ratio of wounded and otherwise Incapacitated soldiers were added to the German-announced totals. It further is pointed out that the losses of the army on offense are always greater than those of the defensive army, hence, according to military statistics, Germany's losses would be far greater than her total available manpower, the high command's report to be correct.

The fact that the ganda department would issue such a statement, so plainly fan fastic, is proof that the Russians are winning the battle of paychology. While the German p ple officially are denied the Russian reports, nevertheless officially are denied the such claims have a way of getting a round, particularly when sponsored by a nation that has built up such a powerful underground organization as the communist party.
