Strikes and Green Apples

The right to strike is a little like the right to eat green apples.

Properly used, the right to eat green apples is a fine thing.

Eaten in excess, at the wrong season, and improperly prepared, green apples may bring to the eater unmeasured woe.

But only when the boy grows older does he learn how and when to eat green apples.

There are signs that excessive indulgence in green-apple strike fruit is going to bring organized labor a stomach-ache unless restraint appears.

There is no time like now to learn.

A man has a right to play his radio in his room at night.

There is no greater menace to the right to strike than the misuse of that right in an arbitrary, unreasoning, hasty, or selfish manner.

What is the best way to preserve a right? Deserve it.

THANKSGIVING tables aren't quite as long as they used to be in grandmother's day.

But even that is a small operation compared with the one Uncle Sam is undertaking in preparing Thanksgiving dinner for 1,500,000 of his nephews who are in the Army today.

somehow in the Mediterranean east of Gibraltar.

We read the other of a convoy of axis supply ship along with escorting Italian warships somewhere in the Mediterranean between the Italian and the African coasts.

WINTER is coming on. As winter tightens its grip on the north, the war will move to the south.

The Germans are assumed to be preparing a pincer movement against Egypt, one jaw reaching down through the Mediterranean and into Italian Libya and the other pushing down through the Caucasus, Iran, Iraq (and maybe Turkey) to grip Egypt from the east.

Hitler hopes to squeeze Egypt between these pincer jaws.

FOR months Britain has been doing relatively little fighting. As (and when) these pincer jaws begin to thrust to the south, this situation will change abruptly.

THERE has been much yelling for the British to open up another front. There have been jokes about ways and means to get Britain into the war.

Rose Bowl Race Widened to Take In Three Teams

O. S. C. Now Looms as Best Bet After Downing Bears, While Cougars Topple Stanford

By RUSS NEWLAND SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 17. (AP) Pieskin preview: Dizzy as a roller skating derby, the Pacific coast conference football championship race was knotted three ways today and getting nowhere at a brisk pace.

Until the returns of Nov. 29 games are in and tabulated, the league's Rose Bowl nominee will not be known, if it is then.

The faculty athletic representatives whose votes put the team in the New Year's day classic at Pasadena may even wait until Southern California and the University of California at Los Angeles have played their game, December 6. It is the last conference contest of the season.

Pending any clarification of the title chase, Oregon State, Stanford and Washington share the lead in the matter of defeats, each with two. Oregon State leads in victories with five, compared to four for its rivals.

Oregon State moved into the most favorable position when league leading Stanford was stopped flat by Washington State in one of the stunning upsets of last Saturday's calendar. It just about wrecked Stanford's Rose Bowl hopes. The score was 14-13, due chiefly to Stanford's failure to convert an extra point after touchdown.

Oregon State Now Best Bet. The best bet for the Rose Bowl now seems to be Oregon State, conqueror of California, 6 to 0 last week. If it wins from Montana this Saturday and from Oregon the following week-end, the conference heads undoubtedly will name it as the representative.

The Beavers already hold wins over their chief rivals, Washington and Stanford.

Oregon and Washington meet this week in the outstanding game and the outcome, even if it is a tie, will serve to clear up some of the confusion. Oregon State figures to turn in a winning job on Montana. Disappointed Stanford lays off a week and will wind up its conference program with California, November 23.

The team that has turned in the most amazing record of the season, Washington State, meets Gonzaga and the latter's unimpressive record causes no fear. W. S. C. wound up its conference schedule with the upset win over Stanford and previously polished off Oregon State, Oregon and California.

Santa Clara, defeated by Oregon last week, takes on U. C. L. A. this Saturday. It is a non-conference game.

California, completely out of the running with four conference losses, is idle while preparing for Stanford a week later.

Nazis Forced To Take Offensive In Mediterranean

Lowering of Italian Morale Seen in Recent Incidents, Ouster of Aviation Chief

(By Fred Vanderschmidt) Germany discloses today that her submarines are taking over the Italian zone of naval operations in the Mediterranean, and this may have much more far-reaching consequences than the sinking of the British aircraft carrier Ark Royal and the report of damaging of the British battle ship Malaya.

For weeks, British surface craft and British submarines and air-planes have made something of a parade ground of the western half of this sea, smashing or crippling many of the Italian and German troop and supply ships which have started for Libya to reinforce the axis armies on the Egyptian frontier.

Italian submarines have been singularly inept at dealing with these British warships and Italian surface ships have been distinguished by their absence or their unwillingness to stay and fight.

This is one reason the German U-boats have moved in, but it may not be the only reason.

The question of the long stretch of northern Africa occupied by the French is coming up again. The Vichy war minister, General Huntziger, spent nearly three weeks there on an urgent and mysterious mission and was killed in an air accident on his way home.

More than a month ago British Prime Minister Churchill warned the house of commons that Hitler might, while taking the defensive in Russia, "make his way through Spain into northwest Africa."

Necessity Goads Hitler It is certainly clear that the German armies are at least approaching a standstill in the east. Therefore, even though Herr Hitler may be unable to unleash a full-dress foray with army and air power in the western Mediterranean, his acute need for spectacular success, somewhere, impels him to do what he can in that theater.

There is an especial urgency, too, that he attack British sea power, which has reached a point where Churchill can not only say that it is master of the western Mediterranean, but can detail substantial forces to deal with the situation in the Pacific and Indian oceans.

British naval authorities have been frank to acknowledge that increasing use of the U. S. fleet in the western hemisphere supply lines has taken a big load off the royal navy and enabled it to spread its strength more thickly elsewhere.

Aside from all this, the appearance of the German U-boats in the most precious part of Mussolini's "mare nostrum" permits new insight into the condition of Italian morale, and it indicates that the Italian apathy toward the war has penetrated deep into the remaining armed forces.

Perhaps the sacking today of Italy's air chief, the veteran Francesco Pignatelli, is further evidence of this creeping paralysis.

DAILY DEVOTIONS

DR. CHAS. A. EDWARDS

"Where there is no vision the people perish." The word vision, as used in the Bible, may be interpreted to mean the ability to see and appreciate the values which are unseen by the physical eyes.

Where that ability is lacking, the individual and the nation perish. This kind of vision enables us to see ourselves in true light. It is strange indeed that one lives so close to himself that he cannot see his own faults and sins, which are so obvious to others.

The ability to see ourselves comes from God. This vision enables one to discern between right and wrong. One of the tragedies of our day is that so many do not have this vision. Their conscience is dull and moral issues are no longer clear. There is much blind optimism and dark pessimism abroad in the world. This spiritual vision is essential if we are to see the needs of the world as they actually exist.

This vision is indispensable if we are to see the world as it ought to be, and as it can be come under the leadership of God's spirit and through consecrated lives. Truly, where there is no vision, the people perish. Do we see as God sees? Let us be in those around us, the light of the world. Amen.
