We Who Wait and Hope

IT is just about time to sit down and attempt to calmly evaluate our own relationship to the hap penings in the world these last few days. Such evaluations may very well, at present at least, be concerned with the quest) it Just what does this world-wide was (with the United states in the center) mean to us-individually and here at home in Douglas county, Oregon.

We can do very little about the daily developments throughout whole world. We shall, in fact, be only relatively meagerly informed as to what actually is happening. We can follow events and do everything possible to help from considering them. -but those things are happening at a great distance. We are living lives right here. This, of course, refers to those who will not be a part of the armed fore

We will be the restless mil lions who wait, and hope, A simple, homely, and rugged philosophy that should be reasonably valuable to hold would run something like this: We find our selves in a world gone mad. We are here on earth yet we can do very little about it. Meanwhile we have our daily lives to live We must do our daily work, and enjoy our daily pleasures what ever they may be as modified by conditions. We will suffer our usual sorrows-possibly a little rance than endured under peace time conditions. We can best serve our government and our selves by carrying on in a manner that is as nearly normal as pos-sible. There is, in fact, very little actually in our lives locally that is abnormal. A few commodities are scarce. Prices have changed sures require our attention to instructions, and some of our time in taking part in them. But otherwise we are living normal peaceful lives. After all, there is really nothing else we can do is

Sensible Appointment

THE sudden death of Major General George A. White left vacant a very important state of-fice—the office of Adjutant Gen eral of the state of Oregon. Such vacancies are filled by appointment by the governor, who recently named Brigadier General Thomas E. Rilea to succeed General White. This is a most sensible appointment for a variety of censions.
