DAILY DEVOTIONS: DR. CHAS. A. EDWARDS. What a year this has been. Wars, rumors of wars, broken pledges, cruel atrocities, jungle barbarities. One of the great casualties of these days is our own serene and inner world. How can we keep thinking about things that are pure and just and honorable in a day when there is so much injustice and impurity and dishonor? The Apostle Paul, at the end of a hard, long life, exhorts his followers to think the true thoughts. He had met these same demonic forces that torment our world. He had done their utmost to destroy their foundation of faith, but the aged warrior, with the scars of the Lord Jesus on his body, still cries out: "Finally, my brethren." This is my last word; keep thinking on goodness and purity and justice and love, for nothing can destroy them. Only darkness in our own souls can turn the world finally dark. Keep faith with the eternal realities. Trust God, whom no fury can defeat. The Christian has confidences unknown to a worldly heart, and so if the night draws on, and the blackout comes, keep thinking on these things, for they are our hope and our sure defense in a strange and broken world. He that trusteth in these things will find himself girded with power. "My strength is as the strength of ten, because my heart is pure." Amen.
