U. S. Troops Seen Destined for Blow Against Germany

(By Fred Vanderschmidt) Just about two years ago, in concluding his tragic official dispatches dealing with the lost campaign in Flanders, General Lord Gort, commander in chief of the British expeditionary force, wrote of "the vital necessity for an expeditionary force, if it is to be used in a first class war, being equipped on a scale commensurate with the task it is to be called upon to fulfill."

Today's news from Ulster makes it evident that this primary lesson in the long, galling "too little-too late series" has been learned. The greatest A. E. F. of this war has reached United Kingdom stations, tens of thousands of husky young men, and they are superbly equipped with the tanks, big guns and transport without which an allied continental invasion must inevitably end in another Dunkerque.

There is, of course, no doubt at all that this American force is destined to fight alongside the pick of Britain's armies somewhere in France, or Belgium, or the Netherlands or Norway.

It is enough for now to remember that in this critical hour the hardest and most pressing task which the United Nations have undertaken is direct support of the Russian armies in their immense struggle in the east. It has been argued that creation of some kind of an allied second front in western Europe, even though the effort were purely sacrificial, would provide the greatest sort of aid possible to the Russians.

It now is clear, however, that the allies—Russia included—have become convinced that of first importance is the unflagging delivery of weapons to the red armies while they still are able to maintain the initiative in their life and death battle; thus, plus constant and terrible air action against the nazis' own sources of supply.

Arctic Problem Vital Those deliveries, largely by the Arctic route around the long and menacing coasts of nazi-occupied Norway, constitute a problem of the first magnitude in sea-borne transport and convoy, perhaps more difficult now than the maintenance of the bridge of ships in the western Atlantic. In the Arctic the convays must fight for their lives for hundreds and hundreds of miles against attack by shore-based aircraft, combined with assault by surface and under-sea route.

VITAL STATISTICS

MARRIAGE LICENSES THORP-DUNCAN — Wallace Leroy Thorp and Susan Louisa Duncan, both residents of Yoncalla.

Automobile Hint Under-inflated automobile tires will heat more quickly than those inflated to the correct pressure, materially shortening the life of the tire.
