

Japanese to Toil In Beet Fields Of Eastern Oregon

SAN FRANCISCO, May 21—(AP)—The first contingent of Japanese farmhands, recruited from the Portland assembly center for the war relocation work corps, were to leave for sugar beet harvesting today as the army flashed the green light for a movement of Japanese evacuees back to the farm.

The order, issued here by Lieut. Gen. J. L. DeWitt, specifies that the volunteers from the Japanese relocation camps, will not be allowed to work in military area No. 1, from which they had been moved for strategic military reasons.

However, the workers will be permitted in other zones where a great deal of the west's food is raised for the nation. Thus, a supply of experienced farm labor has been made available—if the Japanese evacuees respond to the opportunity.

The Portland group, leaving today two hundred strong, will work in the eastern Oregon sugar beet fields, chiefly in "thinning" the rows through their accustomed "stoop labor."

Walter A. Duffy, regional director of the farm security administration, said that negotiations are being completed for allotment of several Idaho farm labor camps to Japanese workers. A second group of 200 more Japanese workers is scheduled to make its departure from Portland on Friday.

San Francisco has been cleared of all Japanese but six who are too sick to be moved. For the first time in 81 years not a single Japanese walks the city's streets.

The influx of Japanese began in 1861 and boomed by 1867. A Japanese colony was started at Gold Hill, near Sacramento, two years later. In 1872 the first Japanese consulate opened in San Francisco.

Then came Pearl harbor and under army orders the city's 5,280 Japanese had to get out of the military zone.

PHILADELPHIA—The zoo's four-foot chicken snake made a natural mistake and now it has a tummy ache.

It swallowed a china nest egg. Ordinarily, said curator Roger Conant, a snake swallows an egg and then breaks the shell.

China eggs don't break. Conant said he's squeeze the decoy back up the way it went down.
