Norton, Jr., Myrtle Creek. WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13—In the proposal to issue revenue bonds for the acquisition of private utilities in Oregon and Washington, under the bill of Senator Bone, the secretary of the treasury and the reconstruction finance corporation are authorized to purchase these bonds. The treasury can take borrowed money (such as funds from sale of current war bonds) and divert it to the acquisition of these revenue bonds, to be issued by the Columbia Power authority. What the treasury thinks of this plan will be revealed when that department makes its report on the Bone bill. The treasury was consulted but did not commit itself when the measure was being drafted. Senator Bone has explained that action on the part of the treasury is not compulsory; the treasurer is permitted to take borrowed funds and invest them in these revenue bonds if he wants to. This is one phase of the CPA measure brought out in a congressional hearing which has been in progress since last week. There is nothing to prevent Secretary Henry Morgenthau taking several hundred million dollars, which the people have furnished for war bonds and shifting the money from meeting expenses of the war to buy up the private utility companies. The joint hearings, although affecting the greatest power area in the United States, have been practically ignored by the press in the national capital. According to Senator Bone, Washington state is overwhelming in its sentiment for public ownership of power and in 30 of 39 counties there are PUD setups. These PUDs want the Bone bill so that CPA can buy the private companies and sell segments to them. It is because of the state-wide yearning for public power, Rep. Martin F. Smith informed the committee, that Washington has received so much of the Bonneville power and Oregon so little, and he added that the acquiring of the private utility companies "is the heart and soul" of the CPA measure. Rates May Go Up Later Power rates in the northwest have been reduced since the government moved into the picture, it was asserted. However, declared a member of the joint committee, when the federal government becomes the power octopus of that region and is in absolute control of the government, not having a private company to compete with, may just settle down and there may be no rate reductions by the federal agency. Inquired a committee member, why is it necessary to acquire the private companies and dismember them and peddle them to the PUDs when CPA can sell Bonneville-Grand Coulee power to the private companies and permit them to redistribute it, reflecting, of course, the lower rates? Senator Bone replied CPA could make such a contract, but they might not. Representative Dondero, who says he is "fundamentally and eternally against the wiping out of private enterprise," want to know why, in Spokane last year on a question of public ownership, the vote was 25,000 to 17,000 against public power and in favor of private power. Representative Smith explained the result was because "we were all back here in congress and there was nobody to carry on the fight." Observed Dondero, "You mean that the people expressed their choice without being influenced by you?" No reference was made to the thousands of appeals to Spokane voters sent out from Washington under congressional frank nor to the work of the Bonneville administration. Senator Bone said Washington Water Power Co. spent $100,000 for advertising to defeat the public power proposal, and Smith said there was nobody out there to present the issue fairly. It is a bit premature, but legislation is being drafted for the post-war period with respect to speed on the highways. In the interest of conserving rubber or ersatz tires and gasoline, the intention is to make a blanket law limiting speed to 40 miles an hour. This federal law would supersede speed limits of the individual states.

Ration Card is Passport DENVER, (AP)—A sugar rationing book officially has become a passport which young Denver women will have to have to admit them to drinking places. The ration books states the age of the person to whom issued. August Hanebuth, manager of safety, has told police if the age of a young lady at a bar is doubtful an officer should ask her to produce her ration card to prove that she is not a minor and therefore eligible to buy a drink.
