Job Stabilizing Policy Applies To Douglas County

Locally-needed industries such as restaurants, laundries and hotels are included along with agricultural and industrial war production activities in the recently announced statewide employment stabilization program of the War Manpower commission, according to F. W. Chase, local office manager of the U. S. employment service for Roseburg.

"L. C. Stoll, area war manpower director for Oregon, declared restaurants, laundries and hotels essential to the war effort several months ago in the Portland metropolitan area," Mr. Chase said, "and in effect, the stabilization program ordered for this and every other Oregon county is merely an extension of the job stabilization program developed by the WMC and administered by the USES in Portland."

Commenting on the extension of the labor control plan into Douglas county, Mr. Chase said that wasteful turnover in employment ranks has been cut to a considerable degree in the Portland metropolitan area where the stabilization program has been in effect for several months. Here, as in Portland, job changes can be made only when clearance is granted through prescribed channels, with certification by means of "certificate of availability" or transfer slip.

Quoting from WMC Area Chief Stoll's recent directive, Mr. Chase said that "for some time the War Manpower commission has been promoting voluntary control over the transfer of workers through what is known as employment stabilization plans. The basic purpose of these plans is to see that workers are placed in positions which will fully utilize their skills to the best interest of the war effort."

"The plans just adopted for Douglas county spell out those conditions of transfer which are in the best interest of the war effort. In general, they say specifically that workers cannot transfer from one essential activity to another except with availability certificates issued either by the employer or local USES officials representing the War Manpower commission in this county."

"The exception to this rule," Mr. Chase said, "is that farm workers may transfer from one agricultural activity to another without need for a clearance slip or a certificate of availability. However, should a worker presently employed in agriculture desire to transfer to another type of war production work, he cannot do so without a clearance slip or a certificate of availability."
