Caution Urged In Anti-Freeze Reuse

Owners and operators of all types of motor vehicles planning to use anti-freeze this winter which was saved over from last year, should have the liquid tested before putting it into the radiator, Jim H. Busch, district manager of ODT's division of motor transport advises.

Mr. Busch stated that in order to prevent a recurrence of damaged vehicles from use of harmful solutions such as experienced last winter, motorists, truck operators and others should make certain that the anti-freeze is:

1. Not of a harmful oil or salt (corrosive) type.
2. That its anti-freeze strength is not impaired.
3. That it contains sufficient acid and rust inhibitor.

He said that instructions on this subject recently issued by W. J. Cumming, chief of vehicle maintenance section of ODT's division of motor transport, state:

"Anti-freezes of the deleterious salt or oil type should not be used or reused; if saved over from last winter, they should be discarded. With the addition of acid and rust inhibitor as needed, permanent type anti-freezes (the ethylene-glycol type) can be reused safely as long as they have the required anti-freeze strength. They can be easily tested with a standard tester and if found weak in active anti-freeze, ethylene-glycol to give the required anti-freeze strength should be added."

Tardy Soldier Hitch-Hikes 200 Miles to Nuptials

PORTLAND, Sept. 20—(AP)—An army private who hitch-hiked 200 miles to his own wedding via a garbage wagon and an ambulance was honeymooning today.

After all, it was a sergeant's fault. And the bridegroom, although late, did send in an occasional bulletin of his progress.

The first came 10 minutes before the scheduled 8 o'clock wedding march in a Portland church Saturday night. Pvt. William R. Lewis, Camp Abbot, Ore., telephoned the minister he was humbling his way as fast as he could.

"The bridegroom is at Government camp," the minister announced from his pulpit.

The tardy soldier's father set out to look for him. The coffee, brewing in the church parlor for the reception was turned off, but the bride, Miss Geraldine Morris, Portland, continued "stewing." The candles burned lower and lower.

The minister again mounted the pulpit.

"The bridegroom now is in Gresham," he announced.

At 10:15 in burst Pvt. Lewis, looking as though he had just been over all the obstacle courses at Camp Abbot.

"The sergeant gave me my pass too late for me to catch the bus," he explained, "so I had to hitch-hike."

"I rode in a garbage truck, an ambulance, an old model car that would do only 18 miles an hour and then in a truck again. The truck had a flat tire and I got another ride. Then I recognized my father's car and rode the rest of the way with him."

Boy Commandos Formed to Halt Delinquency Orgy

PORTLAND, Sept. 20—(AP)—Boy commandos are on the march in Portland.

Some 200 youths already have enrolled and are receiving training in rugged living and high ideals.

Designed to reduce the growing home front problem of juvenile delinquency, the boy commandos offers pre-military training and other wholesome activities to young men from 10 through 17 years of age. It is open to boys of all races, colors and creeds.

The organization was developed by a Catholic priest, Rev. Joseph Clancy, and a Portland attorney, George Rauch, to fill the desires of youth for "raw meat" activities like those experienced by the nation's fighting men.

Father Clancy and Rauch, both veterans of the last war, worked on the theory that the nation's youth who have become embroiled in petty thievery and other "thrill" crimes are emulating in a small way the bravery displayed by older brothers and friends in battle.

Army and navy officials, Boy Scout leaders and business men are supporting the movement. Through the Scouts and a Portland corporation, the commandos obtained an eight-block training ground. The Progressive Business Men's club laid out a tough commando course with hurdles, walls, fences and other obstacles.

The navy recruiting office supplied yeomen to teach the youngsters how to scale the barriers. The army recruiting office furnished a half-dozen non-commissioned officers to teach them how to salute, march and drill.

The boys have access to a lake camp where they practice swimming boat handling and hiking, and to a farm where they are taught to ride. They will be given ski instruction on Mount Hood this winter. Free boxing instruction also is planned.

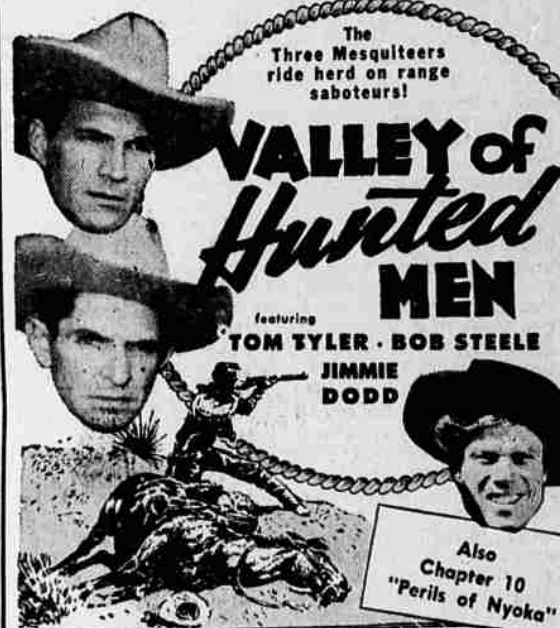

The organization is divided into two groups—junior commandos for boys 10 through 14, and senior commandos for boys 15 through 17. The sponsors plan to furnish them with uniforms.

America will need 359,000 nurses in 1944, or 100,000 more than are now available.
