Coal Deliveries in Oregon to go on Restricted Basis

SEATTLE, Sept. 18.—(AP)—Restrictions on coal deliveries will start Monday in Washington, Oregon and the 10 northern counties of Idaho. A priority system, under which first call for supplies will go to industrial, commercial and industrial users who must keep their operations going, will become effective at 12:01 a. m. after midnight Sunday. They may obtain season's supplies, but no more. "The idea is the same now under firewood priorities, and the coal priority system will operate the same way," James C. Scully, regional OPA fuel rationing representative, announced. He said the step was not rationing. Next in line after the commercial and industrial users, in the order in which deliveries will be made are: 1. Domestic users of coal and wood whose supply on hand, both wood and coal, is less than one-fourth their annual needs. They may have enough to bring their supply up to one-fourth. 2. Domestic users who have one-fourth or more but less than one-half their annual needs.

They may order up to one-half. 3. Consumers who have one-half or more, but less than their year's needs, may order up to their annual needs. 4. Consumers who need coal and wood but who use fuel oil, gas or electricity primarily, may order enough to fill their annual needs. No consumer may order more than what he needs for a year. "It was necessary to add coal to the firewood rationing order because A. Day, acting chief of the coal supply for this area," Ros-northwest solid fuels OPA rationing branch, said. "The purpose is to assure that there is coal in the basement of every home according to the need—and that war and industrial plants are kept rolling this winter—by the fairest possible distribution of the available supply."

Fire Trucks Collide, Injuring Ten Firemen

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 21.—(AP)—Two fire trucks, answering an alarm that turned out to be a grass fire, collided at a downtown intersection late yesterday, injuring 10 firemen. One truck clipped a bus and came to a stop with the front end atop the rear fender of a parked car. Bus passengers escaped injury.

member of the board, told the Oregonian that the WLB will not resort to widespread wage increases as a solution to the Pacific coast's manpower problem. Increases awarded Boeing aircraft workers, he said, put wages where they should have been long ago. Upgrading the "Little Steel" wage formula, he said living costs would have to rise considerably to justify a change. His views were supported by Almon E. Roth, president of the San Francisco employers' council, an employer member of the board.

War Job Needing More Manpower Subject to Permit

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21.—(AP)—Hereafter, Chairman Donald Nelson of the War Production Board has decreed, no government contracts requiring additional manpower may be placed on the west coast without his specific and personal authority. The order, made public last night, gives only the factor of timely delivery precedence over effective use of labor resources in determining how and where war contracts shall be awarded or revised. In this respect it applies to all parts of the country. Nelson's order was accompanied by an explanatory statement from Tudor Bowen, director of WPB's procurement policy division. "As insufficient manpower is hurting production procurement agencies are directed not to place contracts in areas of acute labor shortage, notwithstanding the existence of facilities capable of doing the job, whenever it is practical to place the contract elsewhere," it said. "Whenever demand for an item diminishes, contracts will be terminated in labor shortage areas before other areas, thus releasing labor for more important jobs in the places they are most needed."

Western Lumber Wages are Argued

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 21.—(AP)—A War Labor board panel continued hearings today on cases appealed from the west coast lumber commission. Representatives of the Anacortes Veneer company, Anacortes, Wash., and the Kosmos Timber company, Kosmos, Wash., were heard yesterday. The panel also heard arguments on a commission ruling which gave women equal pay with men in the rotary cut box-shook industry of Oregon and Washington. No decisions were announced. Dean Wayne L. This Is An Ad But it's different. Please Read. It will do you good if you read it twice. I SAW By Paul Jenkins A classified ad in the News-Review, reading thus: "For sale, gun and pointer dog. Leaving for army." His gun, and his dog. Two of man's dearest possessions—solaces in hours of trouble, gladsome companions in days of joy. Next to kith and kin, a gun and a dog cling closest to a man's heart. Yet, there comes a time . . . when even all of these must be forsaken. "I guess that time is here, Pooch. How often when the going is tough through mud and slime, or snow or sand, do you suppose this young soldier will think of that dog of his, lying as he will perceive him beside the fire, with his eyes raised hopefully to his master's face, eager for a casual word, a friendly ruffling touch? Don't you suppose the Garand or Springfield, with its menacing feel of chill death to human foe, will at times be transformed at memory's whim into the sleek, balanced lines of that sporting gun of his? That is . . . it and the dog WERE his. Where do you suppose they are now? "I wonder if the purp thinks of me now and then." The trail this soldier is taking is long, longer than those he has followed in the hills at home. It is tortuous and rough and galling, beyond anything he has known or dreamed, and it leads to the portals (and perhaps through them) of a far, strange country whose name is Eternity. Whining, shrieking things pass over his head, unseen, faster in flight than any bird, deadly things, such as were not known in the fields back home, ghastly things of death harrowing to a soldier's soul;—when he's all alone, you might say, without his dog. "Do you suppose the old fellow could point this game?" Well, my soldier friend, should you find at the end of this trail that which all of us must find sometime, somewhere, somehow—I hope that four-footed pal will come in fancy, creeping to your side, nuzzling you with cool nose comfortingly and so re-assuringly, as though he would say: Everything is all right, Master. Here I am. We're together again. What-else matters now? What-else, indeed? "You can trust a dog's love. When he loves you once, he loves you forever." In that celestial Country Beyond of eternal happiness, where there is said to be perfect joy and utter bliss, surely—surely a soldier may hope to find his dog.
