A point about our Meat points

Few people complain—to us, at least—because we can't always include meat in our dining car menus nowadays. But we have heard travelers remark that some railroads seem to provide meat dishes more frequently than Southern Pacific, and we'd like to explain about that.

Our railroad, of course, is rationed like everyone else. We are allowed ninety-three hundredths (.93) of a point per meal per person to cover meat, fresh and canned, fats and oils, shortening, and canned fish.

Under this ration—if we transported only civilians—we could serve meat more often than we now do. But today the major portion of our traffic is military personnel, in troop trains and in special groups, and these service men have first call on our meat supplies.

Many of these men have been undergoing hard training. Soldiers lead a more active life physically than most civilians and they need substantial portions of meat. So our .93 of a point per person per meal takes quite a beating before we get around to serving the general public.

Other railroads have this same problem, of course. But Southern Pacific is particularly hard-pressed because we are serving more military meals than any other three railroads combined!

We're proud to have these service men on our trains and we're doing our best to take good care of them. That's the way you want it, we believe—even though, as a civilian, you may have to eat chicken, fish or eggs in our dining cars when you'd really prefer meat.
