Douglas Scouts Attain Notice In Food Production

Bill Turner, Troop 7, Roseburg, and Walter Ulbricht, Troop 44, Yoncalla, were two of the scouts in the Wallamet council, Boy Scouts of America, who worked more than a thousand hours in food production last summer, according to a report received at the council office in Eugene, K. A. Wells, Scout executive, announces.

More than twice the number of hours set as a goal for food production last summer is the record made by Boy Scouts of the Wallamet council. According to the final figures, over 275,000 hours of boy labor in food production and conservation helped the war effort in the six counties — Lane, Benton, Douglas, Lincoln, Coos and Curry—comprising the Wallamet council.

A goal of 110,600 hours was set last spring for the council after the Boy Scouts of America pledged 100 million hours of work in the nation. This goal meant an average of about 100 hours of work for each Boy Scout.

BULLY BEEF OR TURKEY?
Asked where he was last Thanksgiving and what he had for dinner, a soldier with stripes on his sleeve replied: "New Caledonia, and we ate the same yesterday and tomorrow—beans and bully beef."

That's the reason the army is raising turkey growers to market early birds now.
