was inevitable. Our forefathers were a restless breed. Starting in their narrow strip along the Atlantic coast, they moved steadily westward.

As we have been on so many other policies, we were divided as a people on the expansionist policy. In general, the settled, civilized Atlantic coast was anti-expansionist.

As the people were divided on expansion, so was congress, and in 1843 there was no clear urge in Washington to reach the Pacific.

That explains the extreme secrecy of the instructions given to Fremont in his 1843 and 1846 expeditions. It can't be proved, although it can easily be guessed.

That is why we have to do so much guessing as to his motives. (ALREADY, of course, the slavery question was complicating the expansionist movement.)

All this is ancient history. It is in the books, to be dug out by whomever may be interested. It may be inappropriate at this moment when all our energies are devoted to a war that is scattered all over the world.

USING BOTH WINDOWS

By Charles V. Stanton

It seems we are continually using this column to air some pet peeve. Our readers must think we carry a permanent grouch and are always in bad humor.

We had a talk with one of our advertisers and in his conversation he seemed to have the idea that because he was paying for advertising in our newspaper he was practically making a donation to keep the business operating.

It is quite obvious that we couldn't operate without the patronage of our advertisers. Advertising is the most important source of newspaper income, but we don't want the business of anyone who thinks he isn't getting value received.

A merchant operates his store on the basis of giving the best possible value at the lowest possible cost to the consumer. He tries to give the utmost in courteous and efficient service.

Advertising is sold on exactly the same conditions. If it is not good value for the money invested then it is not worth having.

The News-Review knows its advertising columns are worth more than the price charged.

The advertiser gets returns of excellent proportion for his investment, just as a customer knows he is getting good values for his dollar when he buys at a reputable and established place of business.

The News-Review also owns Radio Station KRNR. The advertising staffs of both the newspaper and the radio station report the same experience.

There is no denying the truth of that statement, but insofar as the benefit to the advertiser is concerned there is no comparison. The radio and the newspaper are both mediums of advertising.

It would be a foolish merchant, indeed, who, having two display windows would fill one with merchandise and leave the other vacant. The newspaper and the radio each offer mediums for producing trade.

Someone may question why we are raising this point as long as we receive the revenue, regardless of which service is used. That would be strictly a myopic view.

There is, however, one angle in which the advertiser is performing a service in liberal use of newspaper space and radio time.

There is, however, one angle in which the advertiser is performing a service in liberal use of newspaper space and radio time. One of the first impressions a visitor, newcomer or prospective settler receives concerning a city is through the appearance of its newspaper.

are watching young and vigorous Soviet Russia reaching westward toward what she obviously regards as her NATURAL borders—much as we regarded the Pacific as our natural western border.

We would have fought anyone who tried to interfere with what we regarded as our destiny then, and it is highly probable that Russia will fight anybody who tries to interfere with what she now regards as her destiny.
