mont be either cleared of the charge or given a limit sentence.

He was convicted, and sentenced to dismissal from the army, but because of his great services to the nation in his explorations the sentence was suspended.

Through the influence of Benton, he was able to organize another expedition, and he left again for Pacific Coast, humiliated to the core and felling that his career had ended in complete disgrace.

WHILE the court martial was in progress, Fremont received word that the friend with whom he had left the $3,000 had betrayed his trust and instead of buying an estate in the Monterey hills had bought the Mariposa grant, back up in the Sierra.

He started for California again with the idea of finding the traitor and laying upon him the heavy hand of retribution. Taking it all in all, it would have been hard to find a gloomier man than Fremont when he departed this time for the West.

JUST then fate—never indifferent to Fremont; always ready to shower him with the best or with the worst—intervened again.

At Santa Fe he learned of the discovery of gold in California and WHERE—and knew instantly that his Mariposa grant was in the very center of the discovery. A few days later, he encountered 25 peons returning to Mexico and hired them and took them back to dig gold for him. His anger at his recreant friend promptly evaporated.

His despised Mariposa grant made him the richest man in America.

ONE of his first acts was to bring his beautiful and talented wife, Jessie Benton Fremont, to the West, and together they tackled the job of developing the Mariposa grant. She worked side by side with him.

Great wealth was soon theirs. They bought a ready-cut house to be brought from China, and when it arrived they erected it in the sand dunes of what was then San Francisco, practically at the present site of the Palace hotel.

Here they entertained the great and the famous and the adventurous who were pouring into the gold fields in a steady stream. For a reasonable length of time, they lived an idyllic life—all the more idyllic because they were working hard and accomplishing.

THEN Fremont's unlucky star came back into the ascendant. Through land title troubles—always present in early California—he lost his Mariposa grant. His investments hadn't been too sound, and his wealth evaporated.

He came back to Missouri a ruined man.

THE war between the states, which had been hanging so long like a dark cloud, broke about that time. Fremont entered the army again, and served faithfully and well in the Union campaigns of the west. By the end of the war, he had risen to be a general.

He ran for President. He was defeated. By then his unlucky star was permanently in the sky. After his defeat, he disappeared from public life.

A strange man this Fremont, who has left his name scattered all over the West, especially in southern Oregon.

VALUES IN WOOD WASTE

By Charles V. Stanton

WE are hearing a great deal these days concerning programs for utilization of wood waste. Congressman Harris Ellsworth has been very active in focusing national attention upon the problem and has been successful in securing authority for industrial alcohol plants which will salvage a considerable quantity of waste material when development is completed.

Just how important it is to find ways of utilizing the materials we are so recklessly destroying at present can be realized when we study just how great this waste is.

A booklet, Lumber Industry Facts, recently published by the National Lumber association, covering important data connected with the lumber industry, graphically displays the prodigal manner in which we have been wasting our resources.

Of the wood in a forest, 33.3 per cent goes into lumber. 11.2 per cent of the trees are defective, small or otherwise unmerchantable. Tops, limbs, stumps, etc., amount to 16.8 per cent. Other losses are bark 9.3 per cent, sawdust 9.8 per cent, slabs 6.3 per cent, edgings and trimmings 6.3 per cent, while careless handling, seasoning waste, and miscellaneous causes take a total of 7 per cent.

But the waste is even more pronounced in other operations. When a merchantable tree is cut, 18.9 per cent of its volume is left in the logging woods to be burned. Mill waste, including bark, sawdust slabs, trimmings and other losses amount to 43.5 per cent. Only 37.6 per cent of the tree actually goes into seasoned unplaned lumber.

Even after the lumber gets into the manufacturing process there is a heavy loss. There is, for instance, a waste of 15 per cent of the lumber used in building trades; 18 per cent in lumber used for boxes; 11 per cent in lumber used for car construction; 25 per cent in lumber used for furniture.

From these figures it is apparent that the lumber industry is wasting a staggering percentage of our forest resources.

Research now in progress indicates that the portions of the tree we have been wasting contain greater potential values than are found in the small amount we have made into lumber and have turned into the West's major industry.

One interesting fact is that rayon can be produced more economically from wood than from cotton. In this same field are cellophane and the cellulose plastics. There is every prospect that much of the wood going into construction channels in the future will be in the form of moulded and pressed woods which will utilize all of the tree rather than the small portion now being cut into lumber.

A process is now being developed for salvaging the bark of the Douglas fir for cork. The United States has been solely dependent upon imported supplies of cork in the past. Now, with the methods recently put into use, we can produce from domestic tree bark all of the cork we need for the hundreds of uses to which that material is put.

Industrial alcohol, feed concentrates, sugar, lignin and many other by-products are being developed from wood, all utilizing those portions of the trees now being burned, left to rot, or otherwise wasted.

It is to be hoped that the industry gets its new processes for manufacture of profitable items from wood waste into operation before too much of the vast resources we have in Douglas county have been lost.

DIAL LOG

By SUSAN

While Mrs. B., KRNR's titian-tressed secretary, is quietly going mad taking corrections and program changes—which will mean of course that you'll have to watch for time changes on your favorite programs — we thought we'd just like to say a hearty "thank you" to all the generous women in Douglas county who have been pouring in their dimes and dollars today for the March of Dimes. We know, of course, that there are lots of nice people in every community in every state—but, honestly, if you'd have been around here today you'd have realized too that Douglas county has more than average. And right in line with this—don't forget that there's a full hour show between six and seven on Sunday night—it's a March of Dimes publicity program—to tell you a little bit about the work and the need for funds. Eddie Cantor, Ida Lupino and Edward G. Robinson will appear—which in itself guarantees good entertainment. Cleveland Symphony presents a thirty-minute concert at 8. Jack Benny and cast do another show from one of the camps at 8:30—and don't forget First Nighter at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. See you Monday—and "thanks" again for those dimes, dollars—and the big checks, too.

Instruction in Tax Filing to be Given at School

A class of instruction covering the preparation of income tax reports will start Tuesday at the Roseburg junior high school, it was announced today by G. R. Bloomquist, trades coordinator in the Roseburg schools. The class will hold four sessions Tuesday and Thursday nights from 7:30 to 9:30 o'clock.

Ralph M. Church, who will serve as instructor, states that the course will be of an elementary nature, designed primarily to assist those who have not previously made out income tax reports. Discussion will be held regarding which of the two available forms can be used to greater advantage. The income tax blanks will be studied step-by-step, Church reports. There will will be limited discussion of allowable deductions.

Persons having incomes from several sources or having complicated returns to prepare will not be materially benefited by the course and would do well to consult an attorney or an accountant familiar with income tax procedure, Church stated.

In the event time permits, the class will also take up the preparation of the state as well as the federal income tax form.

The course is sponsored by the Roseburg school district in cooperation with the State Department of Distributive Education.

D. W. Badger, Found Dead In Wrecked Car, Heart Attack Victim, Belief

Death of David W. Badger, 58, resident of the Canyonville community, whose body was found Thursday in his wrecked automobile at the intersection of the Riddle road with the Pacific highway, apparently was due to heart failure, Coroner H. C. Stearns reported today. According to the investigation made by the coroner and state police, it was announced, it was believed that Badger suffered a heart attack upon approaching the intersection and evidently collapsed before the car reached the main road. The vehicle proceeded directly across the highway and was wrecked in the ditch on the opposite side. The accident apparently occurred about 8:30 o'clock last night.

Mr. Badger leaves a widow, Dora Badger, and a son, who resides at Drew.

The body has been removed to the Douglas Funeral home at Roseburg.
