RATIONED RATIONS

We have all rather become used to our ration books now. We don't grumble quite so much when we go to the grocery or the butcher shop, and even the grocer and the butcher can now count out the necessary stamps without forgetting to collect the cash also. And the funny thing about it all is that we are still eating enough to keep plump.

At first, we thought war time rations for poultry and live stock was going to cut down production and growth severely. Didn't see how it could possibly be otherwise. Especially chickens and turkeys.

Much to the surprise of everyone, and most of all to the experts, we found that with two or three per cent of animal protein along with a lot of soybean meal, we produced about as many eggs and as good growth on fryers and turkeys as we ever did on pre-war feeds.

Right here, we notice you rare up on your hind legs, and say "Whoa." "It took about a month longer to get turkeys ready for market and that much longer for a flock of pullets to come into production." And even then, the finish on the turks wasn't quite as good, and the hens didn't lay quite as heavy as normal.

Yes, we agree with you. That's just what did happen. BUT (and here is a great big BUT). If we could always have had the substitutes for meat scrap, fish meal and milk, in the form of soybean or peanut, or coconut meal you couldn't have told the difference, nor we couldn't either. Experiments proved time after time that we have all been kidding ourselves for years about the necessity of animal proteins.

The substitutes worked fine. Better than anyone dreamed. Then we couldn't get the sub-

SOUTH AMERICAN MEAT POSSIBLE

Encouraging news in a letter from FDA is that "at this time we are attempting to line up between 3,000 and 4,000 tons of imported animal protein material for direct shipment to the West Coast from South America." We understand the shipment, if it can be made will leave South America late in February.

While 4,000 tons of meat is a very small per cent of what is used in the Pacific Northwest, it will help a lot, provided we can get all the soybean meal we want.

studies, so we got substitutes for the substitutes, and even that wasn't so bad. It finally got to where we had to TRY to get substitutes for the substitutes for the original substitutes.

They would probably have answered fairly well, except for the fact that many a time even they were not available. Every feed company was forced to make feed out of whatever could be had, or close up shop until better ingredients could be found and railed in. There was really no alternative. Birds couldn't be allowed to starve, so-o-o.

This is not intended as an alibi. It is a plain statement of facts. Without patting our own back, we think the grower owes the feed industry heartfelt gratitude for a job well done. It is nothing short of a miracle that production goals were accomplished under such extreme difficulties.

THOSE DARNED TURKEY SADDLES

We will have to apologize. We were promised shipment of our

TIME TO ORDER CHICKS

Hatching egg market shot. Commercial egg market shot. Fryer market shot. What's the use? Might as well get half shot ourselves.

But after awhile the commercial egg market will shoot up; then hatching egg demand will shoot, fryers might shoot, and we'd feel like shooting ourselves for getting only half shot.

Every year we go through the same thing, and from many years experience have come to the conclusion that there is but one thing to do, and that is carry on as usual. Plan on the same number of baby chicks as you always get, and order them right now.

If you are in the hatching egg business and can't sell eggs, why not take a bunch into the hatchery and get set for your next fall's layers? If you haven't hatching eggs no doubt you can get some from your neighbor now easier than you can four or five weeks from now. At any rate, your best money will be in early hatched chicks, and unless you start right now, you can't get them early.

turkey saddles Jan. 20th, and expected them by the 24th. Just yesterday we received notice that delivery couldn't be made just yet. We wired and told them to send us a few at a time, which they promise to do. We may see some next week, or at latest by the first week in February.

To the Boys and Girls of This City who enlisted in the U. S. Victory Waste Paper Campaign-from their Brothers and Dads at the Front!

Thanks

FROM the foxholes of the Pacific Islands...from the hard-won crests of Italy... from every front where the men of this city are today grappling with our enemies... comes a great surge of gratitude to the boys and girls they left behind.

How proud they must be to know that when the nation faced a critical shortage of that vital war material... waste paper... it was the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, the Campfire Girls, YMCA and other groups, who went from house to house like young Paul Revere rousing the householders and gathering the waste paper.

They spread the word that 700,000 products needed at the front are either wrapped or made with paper. They reminded us that food, blood plasma and shells are all paper-boxed. They told our grown-ups that many plane parts, helmet linings and camouflage strips are made directly from waste paper.

These Waste Paper Commandos got the ball rolling. But it's a continuing job. More and more waste paper will be needed till the war is won.
