done before that crop can be harvested. NIMITZ goes on: "We want air bases in China from which we can deliver air raids—NOT sporadic ones, but like those the Germans are receiving."

Whereupon "high quarters" in Washington chime in with an estimate that Japanese planes are now turning out 1200 or more planes a month, preponderately FIGHTER types, adding that Jap production of 1200 planes a month is TWICE AS BIG as most of our estimates since Pearl Harbor have indicated.

INCURABLE optimists will promptly point out that if the Japs are concentrating on fighter planes (which are defensive weapons) it means that from here on they will be fighting all ways on the defensive and never on the offensive. The super-optimists will leap on to the conclusion that this means the Japs KNOW THEY'RE LICKED.

Before accepting that rosy conclusion, get out your map again. It will tell you the Japs have ALREADY swallowed about all the territory they can hope to digest in a century. All they want now is to hold onto what they've grabbed.

Defensive fighting is all that plan calls for. If the Japs are producing 1200 planes a month, here's the way it works out: The best figures available indicate that from January 1 to February 6 of this year (a little more than a month) the Japs have lost somewhat more than 700 planes.

Destroying more than 700 of their planes is a big achievement on our part. Still, if these latest estimates from Washington are anything like correct, their losses have amounted to only a little more than HALF of their production.

THERE'S nothing to indicate that the Jap war from here on will be a cinch and soon over. There's plenty to indicate that we have a hard, bloody job ahead in the Pacific.

AND we of the Pacific Coast can't help being worried by Washington's admission that we've been UNDERESTIMATING Jap plane production. Washington has underestimated Japan from the start.

THERE isn't much new from Europe. It seems plain that a fierce battle is shaping up for our narrow beach head below Rome. The Germans are bringing up reinforcements. Their reinforcements come BY LAND; ours must come by sea. The Germans claim that the waters off the beach where our men are dug in are a

A GREAT ONE-MAN TEAM

By Charles V. Stanton

RECENT events in Washington furnish prospect of a sorry political picture in this country in the next few months. Unless we are very badly mistaken, we will see a candidate for the presidency of the United States attempting to buy votes with other people's money.

It would appear that the trend has been established. The president tried to avoid the showdown by his national service proposal. But congress has evidently dropped the "hot potato," leaving President Roosevelt on the spot.

Organized labor, which has been tangling with the National Labor Relations board, the War Labor board, the Department of Economic Stabilization, the War Manpower commission, the Office of War Mobilization and numerous other agencies without satisfactory results, will be quick to seize upon the opportunity the present political set-up affords.

Smart union heads know the period of high wages, necessitated by the war effort, is about over. It is very probable the next few months will see a start toward reconversion to peacetime production. Demand for workers in some industrial plants already is dropping. As unemployment increases, wages will automatically fall, unless bound by contracts negotiated while labor shortages exist.

The labor unions cannot hope to obtain substantial wage increases through the control agencies, which have been hard-boiled in their interpretation of the "hold the line" order.

But President Roosevelt is the "friend of labor." He is expected to run for a fourth term. He has no hope of reelection if he alienates the labor vote. The president, needing the strong arm of organized labor to stay in power, will be forced into the position of personally granting wage increases to maintain his political position.

The recent railroad strike threat is a case in point. The threat was not against management but against the government. A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, is quoted in a recent issue of the official, brotherhood magazine as follows: "I hope you all realize that a strike on the railroads at this time and under these circumstances would be a strike, not against the carriers, but in protest against government policies."

Those "policies" were set up by boards appointed by President Roosevelt, yet, in dealing with the controversy, the president took it upon himself, personally, to arbitrate the strike and, when some of the affected unions refused to accept his offer, was forced to seize the railroads pending settlement. As a result, the railroad unions got more of a wage boost than they had asked for.

The issue of the strike was succinctly summarized in the official report in The Railroad Trainman, which said: "This vote told the government that more than 150,000 trainmen were sick, tired and disgusted with dallying and evasion and run-around and stabilization that did not stabilize." President Roosevelt gets the credit for handing the pay boost to the workers. Is it not reasonable to expect that other unions, in their efforts to by-pass the control agencies, will also demand personal intervention by the president? The entire hope of the New Deal is pinned upon the president's ability to keep organized labor placated until after the general election. Only his brilliant personality can save the party. The New Deal can only hope that the president, by clever manipulation of demands of organized labor, can maintain his personal following and thus secure the votes of those who will ignore the fact that the very bureaus and agencies they so vehemently criticize were created by the president, ignoring also the fact that the same bureaus and personnel will be retained if he is re-elected.

Thus the whole hope for the fourth term depends upon the president buying labor votes through wage increases, using employers' money.

It's a great one-man team!

VERITABLE GRAVEYARD of ships—meaning that they've been sinking our supply vessels in large numbers (they may, of course, be lying). They still hold the high ground ahead of us—as at Salerno.

Everything points to a hard and critical battle coming up.

THE Russians take Nikopol and push on toward Krivoy Rog, which they are now attacking from three sides. The Germans may have stayed there too long. As to that, time will tell.
