DAILY DEVOTIONS

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

Brotherhood is not a luxury but a necessity. Especially in wartime. It is not the deliberate assumption, on the ground of duty or of expediency, or an attitude of kindliness toward those not of our own circle, whom naturally we might distrust or dislike. It is rather the recognition of the true relationship of man to his fellowmen, obedience to the law of man's being. The brotherhood of man is a corollary and consequence of the fatherhood of God. All men are brothers, one of another because all are children of God. For men of different races, nations or religious to treat one another as brothers is to live in accord with the nature of man as God has created him. To live otherwise is contrary to nature and carries with it the penalties that are attached to such dereliction. To deny brotherhood is to deny God. This is the teaching of religion and statesmen are coming to see it and to teach it too. A triumph of armed might, a rearrangement of national boundaries, even the organization of an association of nations will not singly or together guarantee a durable peace. But brotherhood will do it, and nothing else will do it. How much more havoc must man work before he learns this important lesson. "Are ye not all one flesh, and is not God your father?" Amen.
