gently or constructively. FROM the Southwest Pacific comes a story of American grit and heroism that thrills us to the core.

Our bombers—mixed lights and heavies—attacked Kavieng, on New Britain island, north of Rabaul. They met unusually strong Jap anti-aircraft fire and eight of them were shot down and the surviving members of the crews took to their rubber boats.

One of our Catalinas (a heavy, lumbering PATROL ship) swept down into the very teeth of the Jap gunners and rescued 15 of our men from their little rafts bobbing in the heavy seas.

The first landing sprang the Catalina's rivets and it was taking water badly, but THREE TIMES it rose from the water and then landed again to take on floating American airmen just sighted.

Finally it flew away to safety, carrying its precious freight. THIS Catalina was manned by American boys—the same boys whom, as members of the newest generation, we were shaking our heads over only a few years ago.

This war is teaching us a lesson: DON'T lose faith in the young generation of Americans.

THE Russians in the Ukraine are slowly and methodically cleaning up the trapped ten German divisions—hampered by mud of an unseasonable spring that turns the roads into bogs and makes movement of heavy equipment almost impossible.

In the north, they are closing in on Pskov, at the Estonian border. If they take Pskov, they'll have a straight road ahead into Estonia and with Estonia taken (if and when) they'll have command of the Gulf of Finland.

FOUR hundred Russian planes bomb Helsinki again—a bitter reminder to the Finns to get out of the war OR ELSE. There's nothing much new on the Finnish peace situation.

The big problem seems to be the seven to ten German divisions (estimates vary) still in Finland. The Finns are obviously fearful of another Italy.

A hundred-odd thousand Germans could do a lot of damage before being corralled.

IN MacArthur's communique telling of the bombing of Kavieng, there is no mention of fighting in the Solomons. The Solomons are now regarded as a closed incident, and the 22,000 Japs left there are expected to be starved out—more or less as Kiska was handled.

Twenty-two thousand Japs are quite a lot. But there are so MANY Japs. The high command in Tokyo won't worry much over the loss of 22,000 more.

THE Russians are reported massing on the east bank of the Bug where it empties into the Black sea. This seems to foreshadow an attempt by the Russians to close the sack on the Germans left in the Ukraine from the South.

It might be worth watching.

A POSTWAR POSSIBILITY

By Charles V. Stanton.

A GREAT many of our political leaders, congressmen and commentators have been devoting much time to consideration of postwar adjustments in Europe. But there are indications that while others have been talking about the postwar problems to be faced in Europe, canny "Uncle Joe" Stalin has been doing something about the proposition.

We admit our viewpoint is extreme, but we believe it to be within the realm of possibility, and if things come to pass as it appears they might, our Atlantic charter, our numerous "conferences" and our idealistic program for re-establishment of political authorities in Europe can be made to look very foolish.

Stalin's sensational declaration of autonomy for soviet states, made recently, places each on an independent status. A voluntary federation of republics is thus created, which opens the door for the absorption of the greater part of Europe within the soviet union, without Great Britain or the United States having a word to say about it.

In Germany, for instance, there is a strong communistic element. When the nazi party is overthrown, as it must be in the near future, it is entirely possible the communists will gain control of the government. In that case it would be an easy step to federate with the soviet union.

France, weak, impoverished, suspicious of Great Britain, needing a military alliance with a strong power, could possibly be turned to affiliation with Russia rather than with England.

That Stalin already is counting Poland within the fold is indicated by his refusal to deal with the Polish government in exile in London. Instead he is conducting his negotiations with the Polish committee in Russia.

Inclusion of the Baltic states, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, can be assumed as a foregone conclusion.

In the event the federation was made to include the countries already mentioned, it would be certain that numerous other small countries would follow, setting up a compact empire that would be a dominant power in world trade and politics.

Nor would the sphere of influence necessarily be confined to Europe, for China's communist population already is sufficiently large to have maintained a form of civil war. Post war developments could easily lead to China's affiliation with the soviet league.

Russia's achievements on the battlefield have earned her a position as a top-ranking military power. She could easily become a dominating political power as well.

If such a state of affairs should result, Great Britain and the United States probably would not have much opportunity to object or interfere. We already have guaranteed free elections in countries relieved of the axis yoke, assuring them of the right to form the types of government they most desire. Therefore, we could not consistently object if they voted federation with the U. S. S. R.

We are not predicting Stalin will attempt to carry out the plan of absorbing the European nations. We only mention it as a possibility. Such a program would make our guarantees of boundaries and our lengthy discourses on post-war readjustments appear most ridiculous.

We can imagine the intense disappointment of the political leaders who aspire to international power and glory and the chagrin of the senators and congressmen deprived of the opportunity for oratory. But, at least, the peace terms and buffer state boundaries would not be messed up as they were following the last war.
