POET'S CORNER

BE YE THEREWITH CONTENT
By WILBUR WILLIAMS

When I think of all the millions,
In those war-torn stricken places,
Of the cold and fear and hunger,
Of the pain on thinning faces,
When I think of little children,
Wandering through the broken streets,
Parents gone and homes demolished,
Searching 'round for scraps to eat,
Then it makes our lives seem petty,
This mad scramble here for gain,
And it shows up all our selfishness,
And jealousies so plain.
The endless search for riches,
Seems so sordid, cheap and vain,
When a million fellow humans,
Have no shelter from the rain.
I have seen the misery, that
Has come upon the earth,
Through the lust for wealth and power,
And have analyzed their worth,
And have earned my food and raiment
And some flowers by my door
Dear God, by thy grace forgive me
If I've dared to wish for more.
