ley incident to the Daniels-Slatery incident in which a presidential aide refused to give information demanded by a congressional investigating committee, but backed down when the committee showed fight and threatened to invoke penalties for refusal to testify.

SO much for skirmishes. Something resembling a battle is pending when the soldier vote comes up for final passage and possible veto.

IN this (almost certainly) impending battle, the weapon of the administration will be an entrenched bureaucracy.

But in its use of the power of the purse the present congress is handicapped by the nearly total surrender by earlier congresses of the right to be consulted and to have their say when it was proposed by the administration to spend illimitably vast sums of money for purposes that were then new to the American scene.

It was the BLANK CHECK days, when congress was meekly voting whatever was asked or demanded, no matter what the purpose or how vast the sum, that enabled the administration to build its bureaucracy to its present overawing proportions.

The blank check period also enabled the administration to lay in a backlog of unexpended appropriations (at last accounts estimated at something over 150 billions) to tide it over temporary congressional revolts.

A word is in order here as to the administration's strategy.

The purpose is clearly to DISCREDIT congress. That was evident in the tax bill, in which less than three billions were at stake out of all the billions spent and to be spent.

It is equally evident in the votes-for-soldiers ruckus. No one here believes the administration cares much whether the soldiers vote or not.

The underlying design is to make it appear to the country at large that congress is trying to throw obstacles in the way of soldier voting and that the administration is the plumed knight that is fighting for them.

WHAT is the strategy of congress, do you ask? That is where the rub comes. It doesn't seem to HAVE ANY.

A HEAVY RESPONSIBILITY

By Charles V. Stanton

Of all the men we know we envy least those who sit as judges in courts dealing with criminal cases. We have seen judges bordering on collapse as they were forced to impose death sentence upon murderers.

Regardless of compensation, prestige, and other factors surrounding the office, we cannot envy the man who must decide whether a youthful offender is to be confined to a penal institution, probably to emerge confirmed in criminal tendencies, or be given another opportunity to conduct himself properly, while fearing that he may fail in the trust and further menace the safety of society.

We believe, in this connection, that Circuit Judge Carl E. Wimberly is to be commended. He was one of the first in the State of Oregon to introduce a system of postponing imposition of sentence, continuing potential criminals in confinement in the county jail for a few weeks to permit them to do some serious thinking before going on parole.

Our courts today are being plagued by an increasing number of juvenile and youthful delinquents. There is a uniformity of pattern in those who come before the courts, indicating a failure on the part of society to generate social responsibility in the minds of the young.

A baby feels that the whole world was created for his particular benefit. He demands every attention, claims every material possession for his own and remonstrates if it is taken from him. As he grows older and begins associating with playmates, he normally develops consciousness that his companions have rights equal to his own.

But some people forever remain infants in social consciousness. The development of their moral sense is either dwarfed or retarded. It is in this class we find the majority of juvenile, youthful and even adult delinquents.

The condition may result from improper environment, lack of discipline, guidance or social training, parental coddling or numerous other causes.

It becomes the duty of the judge to determine whether by exercise of parole or other corrective measure he can cause the offender to refrain from further infraction of law or convention until moral development overtakes physical growth, yet in so doing he runs the risk of exposing society to further damage or loss.

a clearly defined, intelligent and workable tax plan, and should have brought it out FIRST. That would have been good offensive warfare, the kind people admire and want.

A large (and possibly growing) element in congress is SINCERE in this fight. There are members who already believe that what they are doing will be likely to defeat them but are going ahead with it regardless because they believe in the cause.

The great lack in congress is LEADERSHIP. With brilliant leadership the battle might be won.

SALEM, Ore., March 13. (AP) Parents of boys and girls who are in the state training school no longer will have to pay the state for taking care of their children.

Only a few parents have been making the payments. A 1943 law providing for payments for care of children in institutions applies only to privately-owned state-aided institutions, and not to the state-owned institutions, Neuner held.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE

Plans to Unite Vets, Jobs Told at Conference Here

Operating facilities in 23 local offices of the United States employment service for Oregon are being expanded to meet the growing problems arising from the large numbers of men who have been inducted, or soon will be, into the American armed forces.

Speaking at the first session of a two-day conference in the Roseburg office of the USES, Smurthwaite added that special services also are available for handicapped workers whose efforts are today, as in the past, an integral part of the great "battle of production" in offices, factories and fields.

G. C. Weeks, staff training supervisor from the state War Manpower commission headquarters in Portland, pointed out that the same basic principles for matching workers with jobs applies when dealing with handicapped persons. During his years of experience in finding the right person for the right job, USES personnel, many of whom have been with the agency for a decade, has developed a simple technique known as the "physical demands analysis", which is a study of specific jobs in relation to applicants.

When the equation is balanced, Weeks stressed, "and the right person has been placed on the right job, the USES has performed its public duty, regardless of whether the new hire is a man or woman, a veteran or a handicapped worker."

E. G. Sloan, WMC special services supervisor, placement division, presented problems to be encountered as a result of the increased service to be extended handicapped persons by the 23 local Oregon USES offices, while H. M. Robbins, training officer, introduced and explained a program designed "to assist and prepare USES personnel in carrying out its responsibilities to returning servicemen, including job placement and orderly readjustment to civilian life."

Soldier's Gun Death Declared Accidental

OREGON CITY, Ore., March 14. (AP) Coroner Ray Rillance said today preliminary investigation into the fatal shooting of Pvt. Luke H. Farthing of Pendleton field at Eagle creek Saturday indicated he shot himself accidentally with a revolver.

The 32-year-old soldier was on furlough when wounded while visiting at Eagle creek and died en route to a hospital here, Rillance said. DAILY DEVOTIONS

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

The city of Edinburgh has as its patron saint a priest, who quitted a life of luxury "to marry poverty." He lived on herbs and berries in a mountain cave, and so peaceful were the pursuits of St. Giles that a doe attached herself to him and followed him wherever he went. Legend says that one day the king of France on a hunting trip saw the beautiful doe and raised his crossbow to kill it. But St. Giles reached out his bare hands and caught the arrow and knew the pain of "pierced hands." Francis of Assisi, father of the Order of Monks that bears his name, suffered so much because of the sins of the world, that legend says strange marks or stigmata, appeared in his hands like those in the hands of the Savior. The Master, suffering for the sins of the world, received His pierced hands from the Roman soldiers. They were emblems of His devotion to the kingdom and His love and compassion for mankind. His death, pain and agony were endured that we might inherit eternal life. "O love divine what hast Thou done, the incarnate God hath died for me, the Father's co-eternal Son bore all my sins upon the tree, the Son of God for me hath died. My Lord, my Love is crucified." Amen.

The grapevine has it that Annelora is going to sing our request number tonight on her Music You Remember at 6:30—and if you have any special favorites she'll sing them for you too, if you'll just drop her a card or a letter care of KRNR. What with sort of being in on the ground floor and having three local shows that are most generous in complying with requests, we get to hear just about all our favorites. If you don't like the ones we ask for it's your own fault, folks; just go thou and do likewise with a penny post card. Also for tonight, San Quentin On the Air at 7:30, with Irish songs galore, and Sinfonietta at 8:30 with Arthur Fiedler conducting Mozart's "Symphony in G Minor".

For tomorrow, Wednesday, you get fifteen minutes of I Hear Music at 9:30 in the a. m., one of our favorite bits of programming during the day; and be sure you remember that 6:30 in the evening is the new time for First Nighter—this week starring Barbara Luddy in an original comedy romance, "Two Loves Had She", the tale of a gal who isn't bothered with the dearth of eligible males and finds herself with not one, but two, fiancés. Lots of good news-spots, of course, all day long, beginning at 7 a. m. for the early-risers and concluding with Fulton Lewis, Jr., at 9:30 in the evening. Are you, too, having trouble remembering the new time? If you are, greetings, brother, we missed three nights out of five last week.

Due to the serious shortage of new buses, allocations during the past two years have totaled less than two per cent of normal peacetime production, Call states.
