DAILY DEVOTIONS

DR. CHARLES A. EDWARDS

The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah is the highlight of the prophet's message. It reaches the heart of humanity because it uncovers the heart of God. Not only does God suffer with us, He suffers for us. God and suffering are inseparable. As long as man and sin are bound together. But there are constructive values in which God finds satisfaction. The mind of God penetrates the dim unknown. To those who see only the present, life is a hopeless and helpless jumble. But to look backward is to see some increasing purpose. Life is not a meaningless confusion. Humanity is ever groping its way up the altar stairs that slope through darkness up to God. Men find compensation in the thought that they suffer for a righteous cause. Jesus knew that posterity would benefit through His suffering. "He was wounded for our transgressions, and with His stripes we are healed." Jesus looked down through the years and saw the results of the travail of His soul. The cross, therefore becomes the constructive principle and dynamic that enriches life. "Take up the cross if thou the crown wouldst gain. (Merryweather). Amen.
