MRS. A. H. SMITH WINS FIRST PLACE IN LYRIC POEM CONTEST

Mrs. A. H. (Beatrice) Smith, of Garden Valley, daughter-in-law of Mrs. W. D. Strange of Roseburg, has just been notified that her poem, "Roses and You" was chosen for first place in the best lyrics group published in Mid-west Horizons last year. Mildred Nye Dewey, state regent for MFCP for Nebraska, was the judge of the 1943 poems.

A copy of the book "Blossoms and Tears" by Walter Bardeck was an award presented to Mrs. Smith for her poem. The poem is as follows:

ROSES AND YOU

I had a garden of beautiful dreams
Where the fairest of blossoms grew
Among the roses, the loveliest
Was a white rose... just like you.
I gave my heart to the fragrant rose
That was kissed by the morning dew
My love so great that I never dreamed
That you could prove false or untrue.
Too soon that sweet summer was over
Yet my heart was still—wrapped in your bloom
But when the white petals were scattered
A chill frost had entered the room.
The flowers are all gone from my garden
But lovelier vision I see
When I unlock and open the portal
Of a beautiful memory.

To Be Heard in Roseburg, April 19

Walter Hautzig

The hands of a pianist are his fortune, usually insured for thousands. Those of Walter Hautzig, who plays in Roseburg, Wednesday evening, April 19, at 8:15 o'clock at the junior high school building, recently won him unstinted praise from the New York press after his American debut in Town Hall. Hautzig was lucky still to have those hands unharmed, because in Vienna, before he escaped across the Austrian border, the Nazis burned his hands with lysol.

Hautzig will be presented as the great artist of this season of the Community Concert association, which has enjoyed a very successful first season in Roseburg.

Hautzig was in Vienna at the time of the Anschluss. He had lived there all his life, studied at the Vienna state academy, was preparing to make his bow as a pianist before the public of his native city. Three days before the debut, the Nazis marched in. The following day, Hautzig and other members of his family were arrested. They were dragged around the streets by young Storm Troopers—boys of high school age, but well educated in brutality—and tormented before the mob.

Asked what his profession was,

Hautzig said he was a pianist. As a piece of exquisite humor, he was set to scrub the pavement with raw lysol.

At the end of that horrible day, some of Hautzig's companions were sent to concentration camps. Others were released. It was just a matter of luck. Hautzig was among those released, and, fortunately for him, he was able to get a doctor for treatment of his hands.

The Hautzig family were separated during that tragic period of nightmare arrests and disappearances. All their property was confiscated. Messages were smuggled from one to the other that they were to try separately to get out of the country. Walter Hautzig applied for a passport. It took him five months of standing in line every day, but at the end of that time, he received a visa. He paid for a passage from Italy to the Near East, and, equipped with the ticket and currency amounting to about two dollars, was permitted to cross the border.

In Italy, the refugees were treated with some suspicion by the Government—they had to travel in sealed trains, and once were hustled out of a city where Mussolini was to make a speech. But on such occasions as they talked with ordinary citizens, the people were friendly enough and obviously in complete ignorance of the ominous state of international affairs.

B. P. W. C. TO HOLD ANNUAL PUBLIC RELATIONS DINNER

Invitations have been sent to representatives of various organizations to attend to hear George L. Curry, guest speaker, assistant director of the OPA of the Portland district.

Arriving in the Near East, Hautzig found it easy enough to get concert engagements—the larger centers had cultured audiences, anxious to hear music direct and not through receiving sets or phonographs.

While he was there, he received the welcome news that his mother had arrived in America. It was the first word he had had from his family since they were separated in Austria.

Hautzig determined to go to the United States to join his mother. The formalities gone through with, some months later, he started for the new world. His unusual talent brought him notice in New York among musicians. He was advised to try for a competitive scholarship at Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. He won, and was assigned to study with Mieczyslaw Munz and Harry Kaufman. When he graduated, he won another honor—the prize offered by the Madrigal Society, which was an appearance in New York with several other artists. In October, 1943, he made his solo recital debut in Town Hall, New York, winning outstanding success with audience and critics. The papers were high in their praise for his fine talent and brilliant playing.

Members of the association and men in uniform of the Armed Forces only are privileged to attend this concert.
