POET'S CORNER

THE FIGHTING SKILL OF CRUSOE CRAIG

(By Alden Harness)

Published in "The Spirit of Freedom."

His small boat reached an island One blazing day in June. Beside a creek whose water Had quenched his fierce thirst soon.

On fish and figs and oranges He dined that afternoon; Then in a hill-side cavern Below banana trees, He slept and dreamed of battles Far out on smoky seas.

With these unpeopled regions His heart was satisfied Till intuition, stronger Than ocean's boundless tide, Brought thoughts of coming danger.

That could not be denied. One night on moonlit waters, Where wheel the Albatross, He saw a ship approaching Beneath the Southern Cross.

To torture him next morning Some Japs came on that isle, And through a forest followed His dim trail, mile on mile. Then overtook and seized him Down in a deep defile.

With young strength like a lion's He fought them till he won By pugilistic methods His freedom and his gun. Backwards he sang and quickly His trusty rifle spoke.

Oh! how he pumped the bullets; Oh! how the echoes woke. The frenzied Japs were frightened And fast through bushes broke.

Somehow, they reached their vessel. Though wounded to a man, Physicians found them useless And sent them to Japan.
